IMPORTANT FROM THE SOUTHWEST

Gen. Herron's Division Said to be Going to Mobile.

Gen. Joe Johnston's New Line of Defence on the Mobile and Ohio Railroad.

Mississippi Virtually Abandoned by the Rebels.

Movements in Favor of a Return to the Union.

ADVICES FROM PORT HUDSON AND BELOW

Reported Capture of 5,000 Rebels at Donaldsonville.

BRASHEAR CITY RECAPTURED.

CINCINNATI, Friday, July 31.

The Fifty-second Massachusetts regiment, numbering 700 men, arrived at Cairo yesterday, from Port Hudson, en route home, to be mustered out of the service. Their time expires July 11.

The Lafayette division of the 16th inst., say that Gen. Banks's division has gone to Mobile.

One wing has fallen back to the Big Black River.

Jackson, Miss., is entirely destroyed.

Gen. Joe Johnston is believed to be retreating to Mobile, which gives the enemy an inviting disposition to follow.

MEMPHIS Wednesday, July 29.

Maj. Gen. Johnston's army is said to be on Pearl River, a few miles west of Meridian, where fortifications are being erected.

Gen. Johnston will make the Mobile and Ohio Railroad from Gainsboro on the north, to Mobile on the south, his line of defence. He is said to have received large reinforcements from Bragg's army.

Mississippi is virtually abandoned by the rebels. There is a strong Peace Party in that State, in favor of returning to the Union, upon a guarantee being given that the rights of the people under the Constitution—of person, of property and of conscience—shall be maintained.

Some say that they would donate half their income to liquidate the public debt, if the existing obligations could be adjusted on a fair, just and honorable basis.

Gen. Green, commander of the Mississippi State Militia, Gen. Cantrell, and other rebel officers, are moving their commands from the northern and central portions of the State toward the South.

The removal of the slaves from Mississippi into Alabama and Georgia has been carried to such an extent that the Governors of those States have issued proclamations forbidding their further introduction, and Gen. Johnston's pickets are said to have turned a large number back.

The steamer Empire Parish, from Port Hudson on the 24th, and Vicksburg on the 26th instant, arrived to-day, with about 700 of the Twenty-second Maine regiment on board, who are homeward bound. Twenty-five sick men belonging to this regiment have been transferred to our hospitals here.

Following this regiment are the Twenty-first, Twenty-fourth, Twenty-fifth and Twenty-sixth regiments from the same State, and nine months men, whose time has expired. Still other nine months' men, from Gen. Banks' army, will return North on the steamships.

All is quiet at Port Hudson and Vicksburg. The fortifications at the former place are being strengthened, and the enlistment of negro troops is progressing rapidly.

Rumors prevailed that Gen. Warren had captured 2,000 rebels at Donaldsonville; that Brashear City had been retaken by us, and that Gen. Franklin had arrived at New-Orleans to take command of Gen. Bailey's army.

Gen. Grant has perfected a complete system of mounted patrols between Vicksburg and New-Orleans, who, with the gunboats, afford ample protection to vessels.

Everything is quiet. There are no signs of rebels on either shore. Gen. Grant has ordered all sick soldiers in hospital here, able to bear the journey, to be sent home on thirty days' furlough, and all those permanently disabled to be immediately discharged or recommended for membership in Invalid corps.

CAIRO, Friday, July 31.

The steamers Choctaw and Starlight arrived yesterday, from New-Orleans the 24th.

Sam. Gaston, who lost a leg at Port Hudson, came on in the Starlight.

It is understood that Gen. LOGAN will be assigned to the command of the Sixteenth army corps, vice Gen. HERRON, resigned.

THE WAR IN THE SOUTHWEST.

SUPPLEMENTARY NEWS FROM MEMPHIS.

A Memphis dispatch dated July 26 has the following:

By the arrival of the Henry Chateau we have dates from New-Orleans to the 22d, and Vicksburg 20th.

Gen. Hamps reports the destruction of sixteen rebel transports by the rebels above Yazoo City. Among the losses are the Magnolia, Kingston, Tuscaloosa, Perl, Kennett, Acadia, Edward J. Gay and Hero.

Gen. Herron on his arrival at Vicksburgh was joined by command of a large number of transports, on which his division was placed. (Later advices say that Mobile is his destination.—EDS. TIMES.) Between New-Orleans and Vicksburgh Capt. WILLIAMS met Admiral Farragut.

Banks has been reinforced by six thousand men. The rebels, who a few days since were back on that peninsula, are nowhere to be found. Scouts have gone back into the country in all directions, but could not get any near anything of them.

The City of Alton, City of Memphis, R. C. Wood, Cincinnati, Kennebec and Platteville have arrived, and the Bell, Memphis, Wood, City of Memphis, Minnehaha and Continental departed. Business at the landing is brisk. More arrivals and departures than for months. Water in Cairo 7½ feet.

Gen. Green's division has arrived at Helena—destination unknown. An important movement is being made from Vicksburgh, the particulars of which are not known.

AN EXPENSIVE CAVALRY TODAY.

A letter dated Baldwin, Miss., July 26, says:

Col. Dunn, chief of cavalry in Gen. Sherman's army, has just returned from a hard brilliant expedition to Canton, Miss., 40 miles beyond. At daybreak on the 19th, he met Jenkins's cavalry division, 4,000 strong, with three pieces of artillery. After a severe engagement we drove him across Pearl River.

Our force consisted of 1,500 of Sherman's cavalry and 1,000 infantry, commanded by Col. Hoge, 76th and Eighteenth Ohio. They destroyed a railroad bridge over the Big Black at Canton, burned Whp's Bluff Station, burned six miles of railroad track of the Jackson, New-Orleans and Mississippi Central Railroad. Five locomotives, fifty cars, thirteen large manufacturing establishments and railroad buildings were completely destroyed.

The Dixie Works were burned, and also one thousand feet of bridge at Canton. They also destroyed four miles of track, burned two locomotives, twenty-five cars in the depot, and a large lot of cotton at Calhoun. They also burned the pontoon bridge on which Johnston crossed the division of the Pearl river, destroyed the ferry at Grant's Mills, and burned several bridges on the railroad.

We captured about one hundred prisoners. Our loss is twenty killed and wounded. The value of the property destroyed is immense. The railroad is completely destroyed for forty miles. Jenkins's whole army is demoralized, and is full retreat to Meridian. Mississippi is completely conquered, and the people are begging for deliverance from Southern rule. Gen. GREEN is still in pursuit of the fleeing enemy toward Meridian.

THE CAPTURE OF JACKSON.

Particulars of the Brief Siege—Our Forces at Work Destroying the Railroads—Gen. Lauman's Blunders.

Correspondence of the Chicago Times.

JACKSON, Miss., Friday, July 17, 1863.

The siege of Jackson, if such any may term it, was brought to a sudden termination about daylight this morning, by the discovery by our advance skirmishers that the batteries which frowned from the enemy's works in the south had been removed. A reconnoissance revealed the fact that, under cover of the night, Gen. JOHNSTON had evacuated the place, taking with him his sick and wounded, his artillery, and almost everything else of value. The work of evacuation was commenced about dark on the evening of the 16th, and conducted noiselessly and rapidly until about 3 o'clock this morning, when JOHNSTON'S rear guard withdrew across the river, and set the three floating bridges on fire.

The guard of JOHNSTON at this place was probably made to give time for the removal of large quantities of Government stores. Ever since our army commenced moving eastward from Vicksburgh every train has been loaded to its utmost capacity. JOHNSTON was probably informed of the arrival of SHERMAN'S ammunition train last night, and consigned the remainder of the Government stores to the flames. The large brick block almost west of the State House, and adjoining to the south the block destroyed by our forces at the previous occupation of the city, was filled with stores of the Confederate army. As the rear guard left the city it fired this block of buildings in two or three different places. The other buildings made it as light as day in our camp. Nearly every one surmised that JOHNSTON was evacuating, and the opinion prevailed that he was destroying the whole city.

As soon as it was rendered certain that the place was evacuated, crowds of soldiers marched into the city, despite orders against straggling, and commenced plundering the houses and stores of citizens. Most of the officers endeavored to prevent this indiscriminate plundering, and most succeeded in comparatively putting an end to it.

The only pieces of artillery left by JOHNSTON in his retreat were two 64-pound rifled siege guns. One of them was uninjured, but the other had been dismounted by our batteries and a trunnion knocked off. It had been propped up, however, in the capacity of a "Quaker," in its old position. But the "religious silence" it maintained, however, for some days, led our boys to suspect that something was wrong with it.

Some forty or fifty railroad cars and a small quantity of cotton were left in the city, and fell into the hands of our forces.

The rebels had been busily at work in the construction of a temporary bridge across the Pearl River. The timbers for the purpose had all been framed, and half of the structure already put up. The piers of the old bridge were being used in the construction of the new one. The work was left just as the mechanics had discontinued it.

All the railroad track inside the city limits, which had been torn up by our troops on the occasion of their visit in May last, had been relaid.

The rebel works for the defence of Jackson consisted of a very formidable line of rifle-pits around three sides of the city, and at about a mile's distance from it. At intervals along this line splendid fort works had been constructed, which were pronounced models of engineering. These forts were embrasured for a large number of field-pieces, and two or three contained, as barbets, large 64-pound rifled siege guns. One of these was located in the works on the north of the city, and the other on the west, commanding the regular Vicksburgh road. It was the latter gun which was dismounted, and permanently injured in the loss of a trunnion, by our batteries. The line of rifle-pits was constructed in that zig-zag course which brings the approaches in almost every part of the line under an enfilading fire from those parts not assailed. The timber and undergrowth had been removed for several hundred yards in front of the rebel lines, in order to give them a sweeping fire for a long distance. These trees were left lying where they fell, presenting an obstruction which would have rendered the approach of an assaulting party quite slow, and crowded the men much together. The ground was greatly undulating, as I wrote you before. But, although not steep, the ascent could not have been carried without a terrible loss of life. They were so near level as to obviate all danger of over-shooting, and the peculiar hardness and formation of the ground were particularly favorable to ricochet shots. The batteries and long lines of rifle-pits could have enfiladed and swept the wide, open space in front with a murderous fire. It is well that an assault was not ordered.

JOHNSTON, in retreating, took the road to Meridian, the junction of the Mobile and Ohio with the railroad running east from Jackson. Here a stand can be made, or he can fall back on Mobile or Montgomery. Meridian is six miles south of Marion, which you will find laid down on all the old maps; it is about one hundred miles east of Jackson, and twenty from the Alabama line. This is a virtual surrender of Mississippi to our forces, even if JOHNSTON withdraws no further than Meridian.

There have been several fires in Jackson already, since our brief possession of the place. Almost a whole block of stores was destroyed this morning, and one fine dwelling-house, just outside the rebel line of defence. This evening, as I write, the skies are illuminated by a fire in the northern portion of the city. How extensive it is, I am unable to say. By the time our army has captured, evacuated, and again captured Jackson, there will be nothing left of it. Nothing is safe or respected here, but everything destructible seems doomed to destruction. Such is war.

During a portion of the day the rebels held the extreme upper and lower fords, but were finally dislodged by our troops crossing at the central ford, between the floating bridges, a few hundred yards above the old railroad bridge. Their object was to delay the crossing of our cavalry until the rear of JOHNSTON'S column had reached a safe distance. One of our cavalrymen, crossing at the central ford, captured a Confederate prisoner about half a mile from the river, and was proceeding to bring him back into the city. When within a few hundred yards of the ford, with his prisoner walking beside him, his horse stepped upon, and exploded a torpedo planted in the ground, and concealed in the dust. The horse was literally split wide open by the explosion, and the rider almost instantly killed. A fragment struck the prisoner a short distance below the thigh, completely shattering the leg to the knee. His life is despaired of. It is not known whether there are any more of these torpedoes planted in the roads or not, but it is presumed they are, and great caution is exercised by our soldiers in consequence.

The Deaf and Dumb Asylum was between the two lines, and consequently in the line of fire from both sides. It is riddled with shot, and is now but a mere wreck. It never was a first-class building, and the loss cannot be very great. The Insane Asylum was within our lines from the first, and has been under the protection of a guard detailed by Gen. PARKE. The only injury it sustained was from a 32-pound solid shot from the enemy's guns, which passed through it. An insane woman was slightly wounded by a splinter, but otherwise no injury was inflicted upon the inmates.

Col. WOOD, of THAYER'S division, SHERMAN'S army corps, with a brigade of infantry, left for Canton last evening. They will destroy the railroad in that neighborhood, and also the large railroad machine shops at that place. It has been determined upon to destroy all the railroads within our reach, inflicting damages of such a permanent character that they will never be rebuilt, except after a return of peace. Work will be commenced upon the roads here to-morrow, and the hurried injuries of the previous occupation will become permanent. With JOHNSTON'S army withdrawn to the eastern limits of the State, and all the railroads torn up, the rebels will never resume control of the Mississippi. There are said to be ninety locomotives belonging to the Mississippi Central and other roads, north of Jackson. If this report is true, they will probably be destroyed, unless some means presents itself of getting them to Corinth or Memphis.

JOHNSTON had removed his hospitals some two miles east of the Pearl River, where a very few of his own sick, and our wounded in the affair of the 14th, are said to have been left.

From the first investment of the place, Gen. SHERMAN was short of ammunition. Only a limited number of guns were at first placed in position, and all sixes were hoarded so as to be sure every first ammunition train was expected on the 16th, and on the night of the 15th our lines were moved about a half a mile nearer the foe, and almost double the number of guns were placed in position. In anticipation of the arrival of the train, a vigorous bombardment was to have commenced on last evening. The train did not arrive, however, until near midnight, when orders were issued for each piece to fire two hundred rounds as rapidly as possible this morning. JOHNSTON was of course aware of our being short of ammunition, or he would not have remained so long. His cavalry scouts must also have notified him of the progress of our ammunition train, and thus enabled him to leave just in time to avoid the severe fire which would have followed its arrival.

There are many reports in circulation to the effect that some of our shells burst among a large quantity of liquor left by the rebels. The reasonable conclusion would be this: A drug-store, being endangered by the fire last night, the stock was removed into the street, and this morning scattered in all directions, and trampled in the dust by our soldiers. Several kegs of liquor were found among the stock of this drug-store, and it is not at all improbable that the soldiery, ignorant of its nature, partook of substantial wine.

The operations of the siege, aside from the terrible blunder of Gen. LAUMAN on the 12th inst., were conducted with the loss of but few lives, as was also the skirmishing in advancing from Vicksburgh.

This morning I rode over the ground upon which Gen. LAUMAN operated his division in the affair of the 12th inst., remembering which I wrote you from Black Bridge, that Gen. LAUMAN A. was the ignorant machine one to form a correct idea of the manner in which the blundering movement was made which terminated so disastrously.

Gen. LAUMAN'S division was attached to Gen. OSS's army corps, being the extreme right. On the morning of the 12th, Gen. HOVEY, whose division was next to the left, advanced his line about half a mile, and Gen. LAUMAN was ordered to advance his line until his left rested upon Gen. HOVEY'S right. LAUMAN did not advance to the first line, as was reported, but halted at the distance of the length of one brigade on the east side of the railroad.

The line of the enemy's works, after reaching far enough south to protect the approaches to the west of the city, make a curve around to the east and cover the approaches to the south. This last line, when it reaches the railroad south of the city, turns nearly almost northwest and southeast. When it crosses the railroad it bears from northeast to southwest for some distance, and then again changes from northwest to southeast, running to the River.

Col. ISAAC C. PUGH, of the Forty-first Illinois, commanded the brigade upon the extreme right of Gen. LAUMAN'S division. The brigade was composed of the Forty-first, Fifty-third and Twenty-eighth Illinois, Third Iowa and Fifth Ohio battery. The left of the brigade rested on the railroad, it being upon the east side of it. Although he could not see the rebel lines on the east side of the railroad, Gen. LAUMAN could see enough to know that they did not run parallel with those on the west side of the railroad, and, presuming that, after crossing the railroad, their course was about east to the river, he swung the right wing of Gen. PUGH'S brigade around until his line formed almost due east and west. The brigade on the left of PUGH'S had been dropped from the line, leaving a gap. In this position the division advanced. Presently Col. PUGH came to a corndield, where the corn had all been carefully removed except in one place, and the timber upon his left all cut down. His skirmishers, about the same time, were driven in by sharpshooters. Col. PUGH determined not to advance any further, and sent word to Gen. LAUMAN, to whom he communicated that his skirmishers had been driven in, and he had halted that his line might form in front of him. Gen. LAUMAN gave the order to the brigade to move on, and left it. After crossing the corndield it came into a piece of open woods, from which the undergrowth had been removed. Here it was opened upon by a galling fire from the enemy's artillery, sharpshooters, and twelve cannon with grape and canister, at one hundred and fifty yards, those upon the right enfilading the line. It was the most murderous fire to which any considerable body of infantry has been exposed during the war, and it beat a hasty retreat, but not until over one-half of the men had been killed or wounded.

THE WAR IN KENTUCKY.

THE ENGAGEMENT AT PARIS.

The Main Force Attacked and Defeated at Winchester.

COL. SANDERS IN PURSUIT.

PARIS, Ky., Thursday, July 30.

The rebels, 375 strong, drove in our pickets, and unsuccessfully attempted to flank us and burn the bridge. They were driven back two miles, when the Forty-fifth Ohio came on their rear, captured fifteen, and drove the rest toward Mount Sterling.

Col. SANDERS, at Winchester, attacked their main force, about 2,000 strong, with eight pieces of artillery. The rebels retreated toward Irvine.

Col. SANDERS is pursuing. None of our men were hurt.

The railroad is all safe.

Gen. BURBRIDGE, who was at home on furlough, volunteered his services to drive the rebels back, and was complimented for his gallantry.

Gen. ROUSSEAU spiritedly addressed a large and enthusiastic meeting at the Court-house this evening.

CINCINNATI, Friday, July 31.

The Commercial's Lexington special says, this morning:

Our forces came upon the rebels at Lancaster, where a considerable fight ensued. The enemy lost 20 killed and wounded, and nearly 100 prisoners. A rebel force, 500 strong, took Stanford, Ky., about noon to-day, but were driven out by our cavalry with considerable loss, and, at the last advices, were hastily retreating toward the Cumberland River.

From Harrisburgh.

THE FRAUDS UPON THE GOVERNMENT—A CEMETERY AT GETTYSBURGH.

HARRISBURGH, Penn., Friday, July 31.

It is reported that a United States officer who has been placed under arrest within a few days, in complicity with other officials and contractors, has defrauded the Government in large amounts upon contracts for horses furnished in this city. Our troops were not sufficiently supplied with subsistence, and we understand that the Governor has asked the Secretary of War to investigate the subject, in order that those who are liable shall be exposed and punished.

Arrangements have been made to purchase a part of the battle-field at Gettysburgh, for a cemetery, in which it is proposed to gather the remains of our dead. The ground embraces the point of the desperate attack made upon the left centre of our army. Eight other States have already united with Pennsylvania in this project.

Fire at Scranton, Pa.

SCRANTON, Pa., Friday, July 31.

A fire broke out in the cellar of MATHEWS' & GILLMORE'S drug store on Lackawana-avenue, at 9 o'clock last night. The fire extended to the four-story building on the north, owned by Jesse KOON, and from thence to the banking-house of GEORGE SCRANTON on the south. KOON'S building was badly damaged. GEORGE FULLER'S and SCRANTON'S buildings were totally destroyed with their contents. G. A. & J. F. FULLER and MATHEWS & GILLMORE, and the "Union" and "Peter Williamson" Masonic Lodges lost everything. The fire originated from benzine oil.

The Five-Twenties.

PHILADELPHIA, Friday, July 31.

The Subscription Agent, reports the sale of $1,562,350 Five-Twenties, to-day, at the various agencies. Deliveries of bonds are now being made to July 17, inclusive. The sales for the week will probably reach $11,000,000.

Marine Disaster.

THE STEAMER MORNING STAR REPORTED ASHORE.

HIGHLANDS, Friday, July 31.

The steamer Morning Star is reported ashore near Long Branch.

FROM NEW-ORLEANS.

Arrival of the Morning Star.

She Runs Ashore on Deal Beach, in a Fog.

Her Passengers and Crew All Safe.

The Vessel Expected to be Afloat Again Last Evening.

Gen. Franklin's Arrival Out at New-Orleans.

The steamship Morning Star, Capt. PARKINS, from New-Orleans, went ashore yesterday morning, at 6 o'clock, on Deal Beach. She was in an easy position, and would probably be got off at high water last evening. Assistance was sent down to her from the City.

The passengers were all safely landed on the beach, and came up to the City in the steamer from Shrewsbury.

She left New-Orleans on the 25th, at 5 A. M.

The river was open—several vessels having arrived from St. Louis within a few days.

Gen. FRANKLIN arrived on the 20th of July, and had proceeded to Baton Rouge.

The following resolutions were presented to Capt. PARKINS:

Resolved, That the passengers on the steamship Morning Star, on the trip from New-Orleans to New-York, hereby exonerate the Captain, officers and crew from all blame for the disaster which happened this morning; and we are much indebted to them for their uniform kindness and attention during our trip, and especially for their discretion and efficiency in taking all their passengers safely ashore.

LONG BRANCH, Friday, July 31, 1863.

(Signed) JOHN HUTCHINS, M. C., Pres't.

Capt. C. A. GARVIN, Secretary, and 108 passengers.

The passengers reached the City at 8 o'clock. They are as follows:

Mrs. Wm. Anderson, E. J. Rebet, F. Galpi, D. Lanata, Mrs. Gonzaut, child and servant, Mr. Crozier, L. Cazaux, two daughters and servant, A. Montagne, S. W. Clark, O. Culper, Eddy and Tom Forbes, Mary E. Hill, Col. Jerome and servant, Mr. Fernandez, L. Du Cuyer, F. Ozanne, E. Hooper, Miss M. C. Marshall, L. Du Cuyer, and A. Baker, E. Pierre and lady, Mrs. Gregory and two sons, J. L. Kaser, Dr. A. de Saulsay, F. C. Denver, Lieut. Rodgers, Col. Thomas, Capt. Matthews, F. C. Ragan and daughter, C. S. Worell, Geo. Wm. Green, John McCready and Geo. Gifford, Lieut. Col. C. H. Tyler, John Pope, Peter F. Mayer, W. Bonzano, A. Pepin and nephew, Lieut. C. H. Wason, Miss Kate Duty, Mr. Bigelow, Mr. Hudson, Capt. Gaston, David Oldwell, Col. A. Sanford, Maj. G. Wm. Smith and child, Chas. Bannow, Ellen Ingram, Capt. W. H. Totman, Capt. J. A. Jones, Capt. J. Erskine, Lieut. J. Clark, Lieut. J. McFarland, Lieut. Hopkins, Lieut. Farber, George S. Creighton, J. Schriver, Geo. H. Barnes, Wm. C. Hopkinson, Lieut. Mark Smith, J. J. Gosselin, Lieut. V. J. Vinzo, J. Kanzowrim, W. Kaser, O. C. Thomas, C. J. Willis, Mrs. C. F. Duncan, Mrs. Fitz, Capt. Owen, James M. Morse, H. B. Smith, S. F. Forstand and child, Lieut. L. O. Hawkes, Lieut. R. Gorry, Wm. Bannow, Capt. E. Hamilton, Lieut. Col. Fleck, F. McLaughlin, James Cunningham, and 78 in the second cabin.

OFF THE BEACH, AT DEAL,

11 A. M., Friday, July 31, 1863.

The side-wheel steamer Morning Star, from New-Orleans to New-York, went ashore at this place about 7 o'clock this morning. You have, no doubt, had word by telegraph, but I presume particulars, carefully gathered on the spot, will be more satisfactory.

The steamer, commanded by Capt. A. D. PARKINS, left New-Orleans at 6 o'clock last Saturday morning. Up to the time of her grounding she had had a most pleasant and prosperous trip; and not an hour before some of the passengers had been congratulating themselves that they would make New-York by 10 o'clock, thus beating the Metanzas, which lately made so quick time between the Crescent and our own City.

The Star carried 172 passengers, besides officers and crew. Among them was about 30 invalid soldiers, only one, however, so ill as to be unable to walk.

The vessel was in a dense fog and grounded in a heavy swell, with her broadside to the beach. She was in full charge of the pilot, whose name I could not learn, who has been in and out of New-York harbor on this same business no less than two hundred times.

Three boats are plying to and from the vessel, which is is not more than one hundred and fifty yards from my present position on the beach.

The passengers are mostly ashore, and trunks and carpet-bags are now coming. So far, no mishaps in the landing.

The cargo is principally of sugar, with a few bales of cotton. This will, in all probability, be got off, but I doubt the escape of the vessel, as she came on the bar at high-tide, and was running with good speed at the time.

I have conversed with many of the passengers, from whom I have carefully collected the above facts. All with whom I have spoken are loud in their praise of Capt. PARKINS and his officers, and desire to give, through your correspondent, their most emphatic testimony as to the uniform kindness and efficiency of Capt. PARKINS and his officers, and especially during the last three or four hours of excitement and trial. E. P. T.

THE WAR IN TENNESSEE.

DEFEAT OF THE REBELS AT LEXINGTON.

Capture of Col. Campbell and Two Pieces of Artillery.

MEMPHIS, Tuesday, July 28.

The forces sent out under Col. HATCH to look after the rebel troops enforcing the conscription in West Tennessee, had a fight at Lexington, routing the rebels and capturing Col. CAMPBELL, of the Twenty-third Tennessee, two Lieutenants, twenty-five privates and two cannon. Col. CAMPBELL was en route from Chattanooga to join Gen. PILLOW, who is understood to be near Paris, Ky.

Col. S. WHEMBERWARE, who had been captured by the rebels, was recaptured by our forces.

The rebel forces under Gen. REDDY are still on Bear Creek.

The rebels under FORREST, BUFFLES, NEWCOMB and WILSON are operating under the command of Gen. PILLOW.

Gen. DODGE is watching all these parties, and will soon make West Tennessee too hot to hold them.

Naval Movements.

DEPARTURE OF MARINES FOR CHARLESTON.

To-day the force of United States marines which has been accumulating here for some time, will leave the Brooklyn Navy-yard, bound for Charleston, to strengthen that portion of the corps now attached to the Blockading squadron. Some years have elapsed since so formidable a body of regular troops left this neighborhood. The men are all in excellent condition, and perfectly disciplined. Officers who come on from the different stations will accompany them. They are all well armed with ammunition, and are eager to have a hand in the attack on Charleston. Capt. LARNED and Lieut. MEADE are among the officers ordered with the men. More than one-third of the entire marines in the service are now attached to Admiral DAHLGREN'S fleet.

A NEW IRON MAN-OF-WAR TO BE COMMENCED.

The proprietor of the Continental Iron Works, Greenpoint, has received a contract from the Navy Department to build a new iron man-of-war. The vessel is to have scarcely any wood-work about her, save the usual cabin and quarter timbers. She is to resemble the 27 wooden steamers recently contracted for, and will be furnished with double bows for the purpose of facilitating navigation in narrow rivers where turning is impracticable. Preparations are now making to commence the ship, which will be ready for sea in about five or six months, or nearly at the same time as the 10 light-draught iron-clads.

VESSELS AT THE BOSTON NAVY-YARD.

The following vessels are now at the Boston Navy-yard:

Name.	Description.	Guns.
1. Circassian	Screw steamer	2
2. Cambridge	Screw steamer	1
3. Hatteras	Purchased steamer	1
4. Iron Age	Purchased steamer	10
5. Montgomery	Screw steamer	6
6. Shawmut	Screw sloop	—
7. Tuscarora	Screw sloop	10

THE UNITED STATES STEAMER WINOOSKA.

The following is a brief description of the United States steamer Winooska, which was launched at Boston on Thursday:

She is 205 feet in length, 32 feet in width, and 12 feet depth of hold. The keel is of white oak, 14x16 inches, as is also the stern, which is sided 10 inches. The keelson is of oak and is protected by the storm. The bottom-planks are of white oak, 3½ inches thick. The copper fastening extends up to 6 feet 4 inches above the lower edge of the rabbet of keel. The wheels overhang the gunnels, and are as short free and aft as practicable. The bulwarks are of a 10-inch iron plates. The cabins, wardrooms, staterooms, engine-rooms, and other compartments are of the navy type. The machinery of the ship is in course of construction at one of the city shops. It is the same as that of the other craft of this class.

THE ARMIES IN VIRGINIA.

Lee's Army Said to be Massed at Culpepper.

Preparations to Give Gen. Meade Battle on the Rappahannock.

A Raid by Mosby at Fairfax Court-House.

WASHINGTON, Friday, July 31.

Information received to-day from the Army of the Potomac, states that Lee massed his forces at Culpepper on Wednesday, and made other preparations to give us battle on the Rappahannock. His first advance south of Culpepper was to fall us in taking the Fredericksburgh route, but finding we did not advance he concentrated his army at Culpepper. The Rappahannock is guarded from Fredericksburgh to Elys Ford on the Rapidan by only one rebel regiment. The Rapidan is fortified south of Culpepper.

Information was also received to-day of a raid by Mosby's men on Fairfax Court House last night. They entered the place about 10 o'clock and captured a number of officer's wagons loaded with goods. Col. LOWELL, with the Second Massachusetts cavalry, went in pursuit of them.

Gen. Gibbon's Division in the Battle of Gettysburgh—A Sketch of Its History.

The following is a correct summary of the losses in Gen. GIBBON'S division, Second division, Second corps, at the battles of Gettysburgh:

No division of the Union army bears a better record than the Second of the Second Army corps. It was originally formed at Pooleville, Md., under the command of Brig.-Gen. C. P. STONE in the Summer of 1861, and was occupied in picketing the Upper Potomac, building block houses, and trying a little fighting at Ball's Bluff. In the latter part of the month of February, '62, it marched, under command of Gen. BURWICK, who succeeded Gen. STONE, by way of Adamstown to Harper's Ferry, and to March, in the command of Gen. BANKS, drove the rebels out of Winchester. Returning by way of Harper's Ferry and Washington, embarked at Alexandria for the Peninsula; at Alexandria being placed in the Second corps, and under command of the veteran Gen. E. V. SUMNER. Landing at Fortress Monroe just after the fight between the Monitor and the Merrimac, the division was marched by way of Big Bethel to Yorktown, where it was constantly on duty building earthworks, corduroy roads, and on picket duty close up under the enemy's works. From Yorktown, after the evacuation of that place by the enemy, the division proceeded by transports on the York River to West Point, where part of it was landed in boats, while the fight was going on there, under the fire of the enemy's artillery, but was held in reserve. Our gunboats having opened fire the rebels soon after retreated and the division marched by the Pamunkey River to TYLER'S farm, near the Chickahominy, whence on the 31st of May, guided by the sound of the enemy's cannon, it marched to Fair Oaks, crossing the Chickahominy on a temporary bridge, which was swept away almost as soon as the troops had passed. It arrived just in time to turn the fortunes of the day. The Eighty-second New-York (Second New-York State Militia) and Thirty-fourth New-York Volunteers, (since mustered out of service, their time having expired,) in support of KIRZY'S battery, kept up a steady fire in line of battle for more than two hours against a whole brigade of the enemy. The Second New-York, just as night fell, charged the enemy and drove them into the woods. They then rested on their arms amid the dead and dying for the night. For this charge, by the way, the Second Excelsior regiment has always had the credit, from the fact of the Second New-York carrying a stand of colors presented by the Corporation of the City of New-York years before, with the coat of arms and bearing the motto, "Excelsior," with the number of the regiment. The next day the division fought the rebels on the left, and drove them beyond the railroad.

Occupying a position in the centre "in front of RICHMOND" after the battle of Fair Oaks, breastworks were thrown up along the whole line, and here the division was almost constantly under fire, while it held the position. Being the last to leave the front in the "change of base," it participated in all the battles of the Seven Days, meeting the enemy at Peach Orchard Station, and again at Savage Station on the same day that it left the front, burying the rebel force back in every engagement. At White Oak Swamp, Nelson's Farm, and Malvern Hills, it also bore a conspicuous part.

Leaving Harrison's Landing in the latter end of August, again it covered the rear, embarking in Newport News, and thence by sloops to Aquia Creek. On the same day it remarched for Alexandria, thence to Chain Bridge, and from Chain Bridge to Centreville, marching nearly all night in the rain. Now, for once, it was a day too late for the fight, but not too late to cover the retreat, as it was the last to leave Centreville the night after the battle of Chantilly. By way of Chain Bridge it again turned out of Dixie to meet the rebels at South Mountain and Antietam. On the battle-field of Antietam it changed commanders; Gen. SEDGWICK having been suddenly wounded, the command fell upon Gen. HOWARD. After lying four days on the battle-field near Sharpsburgh, it marched again to Harper's Ferry to find it evacuated by Stonewall JACKSON, after he had dislodged the force under Col. MILES. This time it forded the river, as JACKSON had destroyed the railroad bridge more effectually than before even blasting the granite piers, telling the Superintendent of Repairs of the road, who was present when he gave the order for its destruction, that "it would be more of a job than it was the last time" to rebuild it. Toward the last of October the march was again taken up, by Loudon Valley to Warrenton Junction and the Rappahannock. On the 11th of December the division threw the pontoon bridge across to Fredericksburgh, under a severe fire from the enemy's artillery and sharpshooters, yet crossing before dark, in the face of all opposition, and driving the rebels through and out of the city. In the next two days it suffered severely. On the Union forces evacuating Fredericksburgh, it was, strange to say, not the last to leave. It recrossed the river about midnight, recoccupied its old position in and around Falmouth, where it remained while Gen. BURNSIDE led the army out on the mud raid, and while it again crossed the Rappahannock under Gen. HOOKER to Chancellorsville. Gen. HOWARD having been ordered to the command of the Eleventh corps, he was relieved by Gen. GIBBON shortly before the battle of Chancellorsville, who was familiar with the ground on both sides of the river, having had a command there in 1862 for several months. He was left in command at Falmouth with the First and Third brigades, with which he drove across two pontoon bridges and again crossed into Fredericksburgh, joining forces with Gen. SEDGWICK and assisting in driving the rebels over the crest that had been so determinedly struggled for in December.

On the march from Falmouth to Gettysburgh the brigade was again in the rear—passing again through Centreville to Thoroughfare Gap, which it held for some days, and then by way of Gum Spring and Middleburgh, from Maryland and Pennsylvania, making on the last march but one twelve miles to Gettysburgh, over thirty miles in one day. The commanding General, GIBBON, was again badly wounded at Gettysburgh, having been wounded in the wrist at Fredericksburgh in December, at which time he was in command of a division of the First corps. It would extend this article to too great a length to notice all the regiments in the division, but a word or two must be said for our own Forty-second, Fifty-ninth and Sixty-second Pennsylvania of the Third Brigade; the Forty-second is better known as the Tammany regiment, lately commanded by the lamented CHARLES, at present by a promising young officer, Under Col. MALLON, the old Tammany has fair to make a larger mark than it has ever done. The Fifty-ninth, now commanded by Lieut.-Col. TINDALL, has been lately commanded by Lieut.-Col. MAX THOMAS, a thorough soldier, who is intended in his native country, Prussia, for his military education. He was severely, if not mortally wounded at Gettysburgh. The Eighty-second is the old Second New-York State Militia, one of the first regiments to volunteer for the war. It went into camp on the Battery on the 3d of May, 1861, with full numbers. The regiment has been in some twenty battles, and bears a record of which the City may justly be proud. At Gettysburgh it lost its commander—Col. HUME, a gallant soldier and able tactician; one Captain and two Lieutenants, and had eleven officers wounded, 40 of the rank and file killed, and 135 wounded.

The First Minnesota regiment, which is the oldest volunteer regiment in the service, is also one of the best, and has furnished the army three general officers—Gens. GORMAN, DARR and SULLY. The Fifteenth Massachusetts has also furnished a general officer, Brig.-Gen. DEVENS, and has always kept up the reputation of the old Bay State. The Second brigade is generally known as the Philadelphia brigade, and has furnished two general officers—Gens. WEDDA and OWEN—from the Seventy-first and Sixty-sixth Pennsylvania regiments. The brigade is commanded by an able young officer, Brig.-Gen. WEDD, a son of J. WATSON WEBB, and a graduate of the military academy. The Seventy-first Pennsylvania is better known as the First Corps, and was first commanded by Col. BAKER, which fell on heavily at Ball's Bluff. The Seventy-second Pennsylvania is otherwise known as Baxter's Fire Zouaves.

In the Third brigade there are two regiments, the Nineteenth and Twentieth Massachusetts, perfect as any in the army in drill and discipline. They are both from Boston

The Dangerous Classes and their Treatment.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

At length the wild beast, of which some of us have so long warned New-York, has shown its teeth. The patient public will bear witness that those whose pursuits carried them down among the degraded and destitute population of the City, have long foreboded and prophesied unpleasant things. They have drummed into ears which seldom heard the [illegible] class forming itself in our society—a class of foreign blood, or born here of foreign parentage—ignorant, vicious and heathenish, with no habits of self-control, and with those which were intensified by the exigencies of American life. They have often pictured the moment when, aroused by some cunning leader, or exasperated by some real or supposed wrong, these neglected poor would clutch at the property of the rich, and repeat European scenes of outbreak on American cities. What else could be expected in a community where 40,000 children are outside of the common means of education, and where at least 10,000 boys and girls are growing up vagrant or idle, or uncared for?

It was observed that the actors in these devilish outrages were in good part lads of from 14 to 18 years. These are the short-boys of New-York. Their history is familiar to those engaged with the class. Study the life of one, and you will have that of all. He is born, without doubt, of Irish parents, who drink and turn him out of doors. From his earliest years he lives by his wits, sleeping in hay-barges or street-boxes; his society is found on the docks and in the whiskey-shops; his amusements are fighting dogs or killing cats; he is early initiated into every vice and cruelty; he is ignorant brutal and heathenish. What else could be expected from such an outcast than that he should join in every iniquity, when the path was open for him? He is trained to thieve, and lie, and tell, and torture. Society have let him alone until he is old enough to turn upon society and show the hyena that lies hid under our civilization. He hates regrets as he has often committed senseless atrocities; he maulers innocent men and women, as he has often used the knife among his comrades; and sacks buildings, as he has before plundered whatever his hands could safely reach. The rioter of a bygone is simply the neglected boy of the City, grown up, with a favoring opportunity for his vices.

Many of us have felt and urged for a long time, that it was a matter of transcendent importance to the interests of the City and of humanity, that this dangerous class of New-York should be diminished and checked, otherwise perils of which American civilization has never known were impending over us. We have repeated again and again, in innumerable forms, the fearful statistics of ignorance and neglect in our City. It was plain to the dullest eye familiar with these classes that poverty, illness and irreligion were begetting a community which would be like that now lurking beneath the smooth surface of English society, and which shall yet break terribly forth, if that which has already shaken the capitals of Europe. These statements fell often upon ears that were heedless or incredulous. Benevolence has indeed been aroused and has accomplished something; but it may be said that the capital and wealth of New-York has never felt to the full its prudential obligations in aiding the works of reform and charity among the young and poor of the City.

The present duty, of course, is the strongest and prompt assertion of the law. Hereafter it will be also a duty, which no carelessness can reject, to prevent the growth and formation of a class from whom such hideous barbarities and crimes have naturally proceeded. These fearful riots reveal what is the substratum of New-York, and what volcanic forces work beneath it. Other causes beside the stimulus of wicked demagogues may cause them to burst forth again. During the panic and cessation of labor a few years ago, we were, in the opinion of many experienced, very near similar outbreaks. We must in the future, of course, be prepared with force sufficient to put these down summarily down. Still the best of all safeguards is the improving and remaking the material from which they are formed.

The educational, reformatory and religious influences on the young of the poorest classes, are those on which the future of the City in this respect will most depend.

The present charitable and reformatory enterprises of the City, though most efficient, reach but a mere fraction of the mighty number who form the "dangerous class."

And yet experience shows that judicious efforts for the children of these people, produce wonderful changes.

The Writer of this is at present engaged in visiting the various colonies of destitute, abandoned or orphan children, sent out from New-York to Indiana by the Children's Aid Society. There have been over two thousand placed in this State alone, almost entirely in the rural districts. Some of a tender age are adopted in families, and frequently by the wealthiest farmers; others are taken partly as "a help," who shall grow up with the children of the house, and partly from motives of kindness; others are taken immediately as young laborers. As a general thing their success and improvement have been most encouraging, and the feeling of the people—as shown by the fact that we could at once transplant two thousand more here, if we had the means to gather them—is very favorable to the enterprise. The Agent of the Society, Mr. A. Friedgen, has gained great experience in the work, and to his good judgment much of its success in this State is due. His custom is to arrange beforehand a meeting of the citizens in the village to which he is to take his party, and let them appoint a Committee who shall decide on the applications. In this way we believe that the children are almost uniformly placed in the most respectable and moral families, and the Committee afterwards, by their supervision, prevent any instances of ill-treatment. It was deeply interesting, on this trip, to observe the changes in children whom I had known as belonging to the poorest and most neglected families. One German lad, who came to us from the street in poverty, five years ago—one of those sent to have been trained up as a "short-boy" and rioter—has now a snug farm (in Jay County) of five acres, with a house, for which he pays fifty-one dollars a year—is what he would pay for a room in a tenement house in New-York—his flower-garden, a little orchard, together with eight hogs and a cow. He was married to a pice-looking German Mädle, and, remembering from what he had come, he took one of our boys, whom we were bringing out with us, to do for the orphan as others had aided him.

A little girl of sharp eye and keen features, whom I now tell you about Eleventh-street, will remember so forever spending the doors for "peanuts and cold pickets," we saw in a large farmer's house in Fayette County, where thirty people often sit down to table, growing up and having all the advantages which the rest of the children enjoy, with plenty to eat, good health, and sound common school instruction, and is now able to take a [illegible] place in the community.

Another, who was a thorough little street vagrant only and who had sun every here or three times [illegible] working in her garden, interested in the farm, having learnt to read and write, and bidding fair to settle down into a very quiet decent young woman.

In Tippecanoe County we have about one hundred and thirty children. The Sheriff informs us that not one has ever committed a criminal offence, and only one has come upon the town temporarily—and in that case for a decent truant. Their places have been necessarily changed frequently, but that has been the only difficulty. In Noblesville, in whose neighborhood we have placed some fifty children, one of the principal citizens, Mr. E., who had kindly consented to be on the Committee, seemed almost indignant at the question, whether these young children had "committed criminal offences or come upon the town." "Such things did not happen in this country," said he. "Were any ill-treated in his knowledge?" "Oh, no, never," said he, almost impatiently, "We are all native-born Americans here, and every child has the same chance!"

In Cambridge, a gentleman said, "The same number of children taken from our own town and transplanted would have done no better." The larger boys have all gone into the army, and are thus making the best return they could to the public. One has sent back $250 of his pay; another $150, and so on. It is computed that there are enough boys from the New-York Children's Aid Society in the various armies to form a regiment.

The older girls have done the most poorly, though of them many have succeeded surprisingly.

The incidents connected with this journey might be detailed to a great extent, but enough has been thus mentioned to show what can be accomplished in the reformation and successful treatment of our neglected and destitute children. Let it never be forgotten that the "dangerous classes" come simply from ignorant, ill-governed and cast-out children. The bloody rioter is the street boy or the ignorant boy come to maturity.

With sufficient means, the work of the Children's Aid Society and of other charitable associations for this class might be quadrupled.

Social Amelioration—A Suggestion for the Rich.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Enjoying a few days' relaxation and rest in the country, I got punctually the Times, and have leisure not only to read, but study, the facts and sentiments of momentous importance, with which its pages have been recently so crowded. No articles have furnished more material for earnest thought than those headed "Lessons of the Riot."

In connection with the second article, and fully sympathizing with its spirit and sentiments, I would like to make public a practical matter which has long occupied my attention.

One of the most powerful causes of the degradation and immorality of our lower orders of population is the mode of life which is made necessary to them by the wretched character and management of the tenements they occupy.

Land is valuable, and men are rapacious and selfish in New-York. Hence the poor are jammed together in poorly constructed, unventilated, small and dirty rooms. A double row of tenant houses must stand upon a single row of lots. There is not a breathing place for a feeble woman or a sickly child. The married and the unmarried, the old and young, the sexes, are indiscriminately huddled together by day and by night. The contractors for street-cleaning know well that, if they slight their work, it must not be done in the Fifth-avenue, where influential men may complain and give them trouble. But they leave garbage to collect and fester under the doors and windows of the helpless poor. Accordingly, pestilence is added to the other enemies of comfort, health and life.

Want wonder that the laborer, after his day's hard toil, coming home to his vapory, polluted quarters, to his languid wife and sallow children, envies the men who rejoice in palaces, and amid household comforts and blooming children, which she has with his laboring muscle built, and bought, and served? What wonder that his children, degraded by their inevitable associations, become recreant to law and justice, and prey upon society for coveted comforts they think they cannot otherwise obtain?

Could not this evil be remedied by the example and exertions of some humane and benevolent capitalist, by the selection of well adapted lots, the erection and management of well conceived and constructed tenements. Suppose, for example, some fortunate son of one of our early proprietors, who owns by acres the ground in our City, and leaves it to lie idle until it shall bring him large prices to accumulate his already enormously amassed wealth, should select a square, build around it some tasteful, spacious and comfortable houses, neatly whitewashed throughout, supplied with baths and water-closets, and separate chambers for sleeping rooms, and should rent them at low (no matter remunerative at first or not) prices, would not this be a better employment of his unneeded wealth, than a new speculation or investment? What if he does not even realize interest on this investment, he has too much for his comfort already; he would be a friend of the poor, a benefactor of the community, a true steward of our Lord. He would be looked up to by thousands of saved men and women, blessed by thousands more of blooming happy children, remembered in many a morning and evening prayer, and crowned with the approval of a benevolent God.

Let him, if he will know how to be happy, uproot his selfishness and become a friend to his tenants—a father to their children. Let him look patiently after their habits, advise them in the management of their concerns, minister to their comfort. Let him move among them day by day, their recognized patron and protector. His heart would know a satisfaction he has never found in watching the bulletins for the rise and fall of gold, or listening to the chattering of Wall-street.

He might go further, and instead of simply seeking the comfort of his dependents, minister to their happiness in a thousand ways. The interior of the square of homes might be made a green, grassy park, planted with a few cheap spreading trees, under the shade of which he might stand and view the sports of glad and grateful children, the growth and health of many a feeble infant, the joy of many a cheerful mother.

No doubt all this seems the picture of a most impracticable visionary. Who will bring to a solid foundation and a substantive reality this morning vision of a sojourner in the country? J. T. D.

The Colored Orphan Asylum.

New-York, Wednesday, July 29, 1863.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

It is with much regret I see a desire on the part of the Common Council—who, in this instance, by no means represent their constituency—to appropriate the sum of $50,000 toward the rebuilding of the Colored Orphan Asylum. For I presume the intention is to rebuild on the old site, but if so, I must enter my protest against it. The location, however good for the purpose originally, is bad, very bad, at the present time. The land is altogether too valuable. It would sell quickly at one hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars,—and why dazzle so costly a property for such a purpose? I am in favor of rebuilding the Asylum, but doing it in a suitable location. This building has been recently burned by a mob; who can tell when the next asylum, on the same spot, may follow suit? Better build at a distance from the mob, where they would not be likely to go, and out of this county. The officers of the Asylum ought to sell these lots, now that it can be done at a high price, and with a small portion of the proceeds buy a suitable site on Long Island, near its easterly end. Here the children or the building would be safe. We have had abundant proof—recently and years ago—that this City and County are very unfavorable places for institutions like this,—and the officers of the Asylum, knowing this, would be setting an accessories, if the building were again fired by a mob. The large surplus derived from a sale of the old site would richly endow the institution in a new location. Good lands, and cheap, could also be found in any of the southern or western counties of this State. Were the building in the former spot to be again burned, without a moment's notice—perhaps at night, or surrounded by flames—who can foretell the probable loss of life that would ensue?

AN OLD SUBSCRIBER.

Sponge.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

It is not by any means pleasant to be waked up on a fine Sunday morning by the man, who comes up to your room, pale and breathless, to ask you if the doors are all open and the silver is secure; if you know what happened to your house, in the [illegible] City, night before last, or the night preceding, or the night, perhaps, preceding that; if you know that the people with whom you live are actually [illegible] each other with pieces of iron and wooden clubs; and that children did not think twice before they pocketed silver cups, or the ladies their wedding rings, though they rolled up their owners unceremoniously in the sheets.

True we were very industrious all day in putting on bolts, and so thoroughly was our house barricaded the next night, that you will be glad to know that the two silver spoons we borrowed of a neighbor, and carried up stairs, putting them in a closet and hiding the key, are all safe in the morning. Rumors of thieves from your City infest this country, and this is not the first time that houses in our neighborhood have been entered lately. I write this that our present excellent condition may be a warning to others, not to be such spoonies as to leave spoons and other silver in their dining-room closets, and lock the stable when the horse is gone. Liberty and Property in New-York.

New-York, Tuesday, July 28, 1863.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Referring to your leader of to-day headed "Liberty and Property in New-York," and as a practical commentary upon it, allow me to say that two of the well known business firms of this State, who had projected large manufacturing establishments in this and an adjacent State that would have employed at least five hundred hands, each have definitely abandoned them in view of the present exigencies of the country, and the increasing insecurity of property, as evinced by the recent riotous demonstrations in this and other cities and sections of the country. It is worse than vacuous to attempt to close our eyes to the fact that the rights of property are seriously menaced. Worst of all is the alarming fact that while one portion of our people merely deprecate these riots by half conciliatory methods, another portion offer millions of money to aid to the insecurity that already is demonstrated to exist, under the this disguise of sympathy for the wants of those who may be conscripted, but in reality to placate the wild beasts they have let loose upon community. Gen. Meade's Citizenship.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

You published in the Times, Sunday, July 26, a note from "J. C." in response to the question—"Is Gen. Meade eligible to the office of President?" Your correspondent, arguing from a clause in the Constitution, (Art. 2, sec. 1, cl. 5,) dogmatically answers this question in the negative. He summarily disposes of the act of Congress of April 14, 1802, commonly known as the Naturalization Act, by an indirect denial of its constitutionality. He very nagely asserts:

"The law of Congress cannot override the Constitution. It cannot make a foreign born a natural born person of the United States any more than it can make a dead man a live man. If it can, it can make the Prince of Wales a natural born citizen of the United States, and make him eligible to the office of President. Congress cannot change the place of man's birth. A man excluded by the Constitution cannot be made eligible by act of Congress."

Several newspaper editors have also expressed opinions adverse to the eligibility of Gen. Meade, in view of the constitutional provision that no person except a natural born citizen, or a citizen of the United States at the time of the adoption of the Constitution, shall be eligible to the office of President. I remember reading an article in the Times to this effect; also one in the Chicago Tribune, obviously based upon that in your journal.

I beg leave to differ with these writers, and to explain why I do so.

It will simplify the matter, to ascertain what the framers of the Constitution meant by the phrase "natural born citizen." Students of English law—as many of those framers had been, and subjects of the British Crown, as nearly all of them were prior to the Revolution—it is fair and reasonable to assume that they used the phrase in the same sense as, in Colonial times, they had been accustomed to employ the analogous phrase of English law—"natural born subjects." What was that? Blackstone can answer accurately. In his Commentaries, treating of the Rights of Persons, (book 1, chapter 10,) he devoted much space to this subject. I can only cite a passage or two, in a communication designed for the crowded columns of the Times. He describes "natural born subjects" as those who are born within the dominions of the King, and owe allegiance to the King." He adds that natural born subjects have "a great variety of rights, which they acquire by being born within the king's allegiance, and can never forfeit by any distance of place or time, but only by their own misbehavior." (P. 371.) Further on he remarks that, by several modern statutes, "all children born out of the king's allegiance, whose fathers (or grandfathers by the father's side) were natural born subjects, are now deemed to be natural born subjects themselves to all intents and purposes." (P. 372.)

In his edition of Blackstone's Commentaries, Chitty says: "Natural born subjects are persons born within the allegiance, power or protection of the Crown of England, which terms embrace not only persons born within the dominions of His Majesty, or of his homagers, and the children of subjects in the service of the King abroad, and the King's children, and the heirs of the Crown, all of whom are naturalborn subjects, by the common law; but also, under various statutes, all persons, though born abroad, whose father and grandfather by the father's side were native-born subjects at common law." (Book 1, chap. 10, note 1.)

Adopting as our guiding rule—what cannot be reasonably objected to—this exposition of English law, as that law was understood and interpreted contemporaneously with the American Revolution, both in the British Islands and in the Colonies, we therefore, readily conclude that the eminent men who framed our Constitution really meant by the phrase "a natural born citizen," not only a person born within the United States, but also any person, though born abroad, whose father was a natural born citizen of, and owed allegiance to the United States. It would not be very complimentary to the memory of the founders of the Republic to say that they were less liberal in dealing with their own citizens than had been the British monarchy in its treatment of its subjects.

Judge Story, referring to the rights and privileges of a citizen, affirms that: "Residence in a foreign country has no operation upon his character as a citizen, although it may, for purposes of trade and commerce, impress him with the character of the country. To change allegiance is one thing; to change inhabitancy is quite another thing. The right and the power are not coextensive in each case." (Com. on the Con. ed. 1833, vol. 1., p. 566, sec. 1,057.) In support this doctrine the learned Judge cites Kent and Rawle.

Judge Duer obviously is of the opinion that the principles of English statute law guided the fathers of the Republic in their legislation on this subject, and he unquestioningly recognizes the Naturalization Act of 1802 as the existing law of the United States bearing on it. (Lec. Con. Jurisprudence, 2d Ed., p. 304.)

Judge Hopkins says, "in the language of the Civil Law, natural are distinguished from adoptive children, that is, they are the children of the parents spoken of, by natural procreation." (Law Dic., Ed. 1856, vol. 3, p. 300.)

It results from all that, in view of this explanation of the legal meaning of the phrase "natural born citizen," there can be no doubt of the constitutionality of the Naturalization Law of the 14th of April, 1802. In section 4 of that Law, it indelicately that "the children of persons who now are or have been citizens of the United States, shall, though born out of the limits and jurisdiction of the United States, be considered as citizens of the United States," manifestly in the same sense as the parents of such children.

An Act of Congress, approved Feb. 10, 1855, declared that "persons heretofore born, or hereafter to be born out of the limits and jurisdiction of the United States, whose fathers were or shall be at the time of their birth citizens of the United States, shall be deemed and considered, and are hereby declared to be citizens of the United States."

Judge Duer, writing some years prior to the enactment of this law, observed "the period will soon arrive when there will be no statutory regulation in favor of children born abroad of American parents; and, unless one be made in season, they will be driven to resort for aid to the dormant and doubtful principles of the common law." Congress opportunely provided for such cases in the Act of 1855.

Having ascertained the "law of the case," nothing more would seem to be necessary to demonstrate the eligibility of Gen. Meade than to determine what was the legal status of his father, or grandfather on the father's side. Was either ever a citizen of the United States? Both of them were citizens, and both eligible to the Presidency. According to Section 1, Article 2 of the Constitution, George Meade, grandfather of the General, though a native of Ireland, was eligible to the Presidency, as being a citizen of the United States at the time of the adoption of the Constitution. Richard Worsam Meade, father of the General, was born in June, 1778, in Chester County, Penn., and was a citizen of the Republic, perfectly eligible to the highest executive office in the nation. His temporary sojourn in Spain did not affect any of his rights, or those of his children there born, in this regard. He was the Navy Agent of the United States at the port of Cadiz from 1806 to 1817. He also performed consular duty during a temporary absence of Consul-General Cathcart. His wife was a Miss Margaret Butler—a descendant, I believe a daughter—of Anthony Butler, of Perth Amboy, N. J. Gen. Meade, therefore, is legally a natural born citizen of the United States and legally eligible to the office of President, having been born of American parents, temporarily residing in Spain.

The Prince of Wales, I am happy to know, is neither the son nor grandson of a citizen of the United States, and, consequently, Congress cannot make him "a natural born citizen" of the Republic, eligible to the Presidency. "A man excluded by the Constitution cannot be made eligible by act of Congress."

I respectfully offer these remarks, upon this interesting subject, with all due deference, as a layman who has studied the history and laws of his country, merely for his own information.

Very truly yours, MICHAEL HERMANSEY.

LOCAL INTELLIGENCE.

THE METROPOLITAN POLICE.

THEIR SERVICES DURING THE LAST WEEK.

THEIR HONORABLE RECORD.

The acts of the Inspectors and their commands, which have been detailed, were all conducted under the direction of the Police Commissioners. The legal organization of the Board, impeds the Superintendent with the command of the force, the Commissioners acting in an administrative capacity. In the absence of the Superintendent the command is assigned to the President of the Board, and thus the duties of Mr. Kennedy, who early on Monday morning was disabled by the rioters, were assumed by with the promptness, intelligence and energy which characterize him. The labor during the first four days was immense, and some estimate of it may be formed by the fact, that in the telegraph department alone, there were upward of four thousand dispatches received and orders sent, all of which, with but few exceptions, required the personal supervision of Mr. Acton. These, it must be remembered, were only a fraction of the many matters requiring his attention. He was noticed on the fifth day of the riots, and then but before, during the first five days of the week, the duration of riot and its symptoms, and but few days, save a few days which caught him at short intervals to his duties. The position of affairs was one as important and as critical as that on a field of battle; time of as much value, capacity, and decision as important. Upwards of two thousand men under his control, consisting of emergencies arising in all sections of the City, immediate entreaties for aid, information received, and five minutes' delay leading to disaster. Commissioner Acton was equal to his situation, exhibiting wonderful powers of endurance, and a coolness, activity and vigor which on every occasion led to success; these were the more noticeable from the fact that, as Superintendent, an office, his post was a new and untried one, full of the gravest responsibilities.

Fortunately between the military acting with them and the Police, entire unanimity prevailed, and orders whenever the forces were required, were obeyed with alacrity and with concerted feeling and purpose. It is worthy of note that every expedition large and small there were over fifty—sent out by Commissioner Acton, whether of the Police singly, or the military and Police combined, was successful, beating and dispersing the mobs and saving lives and property in short, fully accomplishing the purposes for which they were dispatched. To Commissioner Acton are our citizens indebted in a large degree for the prompt and successful assaults upon the rioters, and to his judicious and energetic action daily subsequent entire defeat and dispersion.

In the discharge of the manifold duties at Headquarters, was prominent. His duties were no less responsible than those of Mr. Acton, and not unfrequently he relieved the latter in the disposition of the forces. He was almost constantly at Headquarters during the period of tremor and excitement, and exhibited, to a marked degree, his peculiarities of coolness, prompt conclusions and decisive performance. He came through the trying labors, the wearying days and nights, fresh as at the outset, exhibiting a wonderful capacity to sustain fatigue. The principal responsibility resting upon Mr. Kennedy was that of the care of Brooklyn, and to this his assiduous and energies were chiefly directed. How well he succeeded in its preservation from lawlessness, is evidenced in the fact, that though there were many indications of violent disturbance there, yet the public peace, the peace, acting under his orders, were successful, in all but one single instance, in suppressing them.

COMMISSIONER JOHN A. KENNEDY

Mr. Kennedy was indefatigable; cautious and intelligent in all his acts, he added largely to the efficiency and strength of the Department, and contributed greatly to the successes which have won for it so much of honor.

The force of clerks at headquarters is about thirteen, and each of these were usefully employed during the hours of riot, ranging from early daylight to midnight. To assume it, however prolonged and laborious, which was most creditable. They were under the supervision of

CHIEF CLERK SETH C. HAWLEY,

Whose duties were multifarious, constant and wearying, and who, for a week from Monday, when the riot commenced, allowed himself no rest but that of one hour in the twenty-four. Having the supervision of the clerks and special patrolmen, the providing and issuing of arms, the execution of orders from the Commissioners, seeing to the wounded and providing for the refugees, disposing of the prisoners and acting as commissary for over four thousand of police, military and specials assembled at Headquarters—these were only a portion of the multifarious duties he was called upon to assume. He performed an amount of work, satisfactorily and thoroughly, which would have staggered any man of less capacity and energy. He proved himself eminently adapted for his position, and was of invaluable service to the Commissioners and the public.

THE NEW HEADQUARTERS

deserve, in this connection, mention. Their advantage and capacity were thoroughly tested. From first to last, there were upward of two thousand Policemen there, all the military acting in conjunction with them, two thousand special patrolmen, colored refugees from the mob to the number of seven hundred, and hundreds of prisoners. All these had to be housed and fed in the building, and all were so housed and fed without confusion or discomfort. Had these Headquarters not existed, and the old ones been in use, it would have been impossible to have afforded accommodations of any kind to the rioters; than likely that all attempts to concentrate others than the Police, or, if concentrated, to retain them, would have wholly failed. The wisdom of erecting the Headquarters, which some have deemed an extravagance, has been fully demonstrated.

FIENDISH MURDER OF A NEGRO.

The Perpetrator in Custody—He is Positively Identified.

Capt. Jourdon and Officer Golden, of the Sixth Precinct, yesterday afternoon made a highly important arrest of a man charged with one of the most brutal murders on record. Some six days since, Capt. Jourdon received information that John McAllister, an Irish laborer, 40 years of age, employed in the sugar house of Messrs. Booth & Edgar, corner of King and West streets, was the individual who so brutally murdered the negro William Williams, (previously reported,) corner of Leroy and Washington streets, early on the morning of the 14th ult. After much trouble Capt. Jourdon and Officer Golden learned that Mr. Chas. Lawrence, of No. 74 Morton-street, witnessed the murder, and it was with the greatest difficulty that he could be persuaded to come forward and lodge a complaint against the prisoner, lest he might be injured therefor in person or property. Yesterday, however, Mr. Lawrence seeing McAllister in the street, pursued by Capt. Jourdon and Officer Golden, positively identified him as the murderer of Williams. The officers succeeded in arresting him. He was not at the time made aware of the charge, being led to believe that he was wanted for beating a female, last Thursday, while on an excursion.

On being brought before Coroner Naumann, Mr. Lawrence made an affidavit, setting forth that, about 5¼ o'clock on the morning of the 14th of July, while at his stable, some little girls informed him that a colored man was being murdered up the street. He hastened as near as possible to the scene of the murder, and there saw Williams prostrate on the pavement, and McAllister standing over him with a paving stone, weighing nearly twenty pounds, in his hands. McAllister repeatedly raised the stone and brought it down with fearful force on the head and face of the unoffending negro, who at each blow would give a convulsive shudder and scream, till the life was nearly crushed out of him. While this brutal murder was being enacted, the four corners of the streets were crowded with men, women and children, who coolly witnessed the fiendish act, but so paralyzed with fear were they that not a soul raised his voice or hand to put a stop to it. After the crime was consummated, Capt. Dickson, of the Twenty-eighth Precinct, appeared on the ground, and conveyed the negro, whose face and skull were crushed in, to the New-York Hospital, where he died soon after admission. Mr. Lawrence closely scrutinized the murderer, so that he could recognize him again, and at the time of his arrest, McAllister had on the same clothes and hat that he wore at the time of inflicting the fatal violence. There is not a possibility of his being mistaken in the man, said Capt. Dickson, it is said, will produce witnesses to corroborate the testimony of Mr. Lawrence. McAllister was locked up to await the result of the investigation, which will be held today by Coroner Naumann.

The deceased is said to have been an intelligent and peaceable man. He was employed on board a Government transport running between this City and Fort Royal.

Capt. Jourdon and Officer Golden are deserving of much praise for their perseverance and success in working up this case.

The Riots.

The following is the report of Capt. Putnam of the operations of his command during last week:

REPORT OF CAPT. PUTNAM.

Fort Hamilton, N. Y. H., July 31, 1863.

Sir: I have the honor to make the following report of the operations of [illegible] during the late riots in New-York City:

At the request of [illegible] in the City I was in [illegible] New-York Harbor. On the night of the 13th July I received orders from Gen. Sandford to proceed with my Company to New-York City, in [illegible] my command was ready, with twenty rounds of ammunition. On my arrival in the City I proceeded to the St. Nicholas Hotel, and remained in that vicinity for about two hours. I was then ordered to report to the Mayor, at the City Hall. I marched my Company down Broadway to the City Hall, as directed, and was immediately ordered back to the St. Nicholas by Gen. Wool, and from there Gen. Wool ordered me to proceed to Gen. Brown's headquarters, No. 300 Mulberry-street.

On my reporting to Gen. Brown, I was ordered to proceed with my company to Forty-sixth-street, where the mob was burning buildings.

We were accompanied by a force of sixty police, men under command of Capt. Wilson. On our arrival there we found the mob in strong force, overturning and destroying property. We immediately charged on the rioters with our whole force, both military and police. The mob fought desperately for about five minutes, when they broke in all directions, leaving a number of dead and wounded in the street. Their loss in killed and wounded would not fall short of forty.

One man of my company was badly wounded, and was sent to the Jewish Hospital. Several others were more or less injured by stones thrown by the mob. My company numbered 60 enlisted men. Lieut. Seamer, Twelfth Infantry, was the only company officer beside myself with the company.

After dispersing the mob, we returned, about 8 P. M., to headquarters—the company having marched during the day no less than 12 miles.

Operations on Tuesday Night.

10 P. M.—My company, together with a Police force of 100 men, were ordered out, and marched through a large portion of the City. Found everything quiet. Distance marched, about seven miles. Returned to headquarters at 2½ A. M.

Operations on Wednesday, July 15.

About 1 o'clock P. M. received orders to march up the Bowery and Third-avenue, and disperse the mob wherever found. After getting into Third-avenue a short distance, we met a regiment, or part of a regiment of militia, commanded by a Major; I think he had four companies. The rioters were collected in great force, and were firing on the militia, with both muskets and revolvers. The troops were retiring before the mob, who had completely filled the avenue for some distance, and also the cross streets in the vicinity.

We immediately marched by the militia, when the mob commenced firing on us. I ordered my skirmishers to fire on them, which they did, with effects.

We advanced steadily, the fighting being between the skirmishers and the mob, which soon gave way and ran in all directions. We then marched up to Fourth-avenue, but found no disturbance there.

At this time I was informed by a special patrolman that the mob had again collected in greater numbers than ever on Third-avenue, and were determined not to let me march back on that street. I immediately marched down the nearest cross-street on to Third-avenue again, when the mob saw us they scattered without firing a shot.

I then returned to headquarters with my command, which consisted of my own company and one field piece of artillery, under command of Capt. Rawolle, of Gen. Brown's Staff. The men of my company behaved like veterans.

Operations on Wednesday Night.

About 9 o'clock P. M. I was informed by Gen. Brown that a force of militia, under Col. Jarvis, had been driven from Nineteenth-street by the mob, leaving a number killed and wounded, including their commanding officer, in the hands of the mob.

The General ordered me to take my own company, the permanent guard, from Fort Hamilton (for the time being under the command of Capt. Gardner, Aid-de-Camp,) and Capt. Rawolle, with one gun from his battery, and proceed to Nineteenth-street, disperse the mob, and bring Col. Jarvis and the wounded officers and men of his command to Headquarters. We marched down Nineteenth-street and met the mob near Third-avenue. I immediately ordered Sergt. Young with the skirmishers to attack them, which he did. Lieut. Seamer, Twelfth Infantry, was the only company officer beside myself with the company.

After dispersing the mob, we returned, about 3 P. M., to headquarters—the company having marched during the day no less than 12 miles.

After dispersing the mob, we returned, about 3 P. M., to headquarters—the company having marched during the day no less than 12 miles.

Operations on Thursday Night.

About 8 o'clock P. M. Gen. Brown and Col. Moore informed Gen. Brown that the troops at Grammer Hotel had marched down Twenty-second-street, and had been attacked by an armed mob, that they had been driven back, leaving their dead in the street.

The General ordered me to take my company and portions of the Twentieth and Twenty-eighth New-York Volunteer batteries, about 30 men, armed as infantry, commanded by Lieut. B. F. Ryan, Lieut. Ryan had with him Lieut. Robert F. Jones, and Lieut. J. M. Chase, of Twenty-eighth New-York battery. My whole command amounted to 100 men.

With this force I marched to the Gramercy Hotel. At a short distance from the hotel, I saw the rioters fire from a house upon some of Col. Moore's command. I immediately sent Lieut. Jones with a few men to search the house. The search was fruitless, the men having escaped to the rear. I then told the women in the house that artillery would open on the house if any more shots were fired from it. We then marched down Twenty-second-street, between Second and Third avenues, found the body of a sergeant of Davis' cavalry, who had been killed in the fight two hours before. I ordered a livery-stable keeper to put his horses to a carriage and accompany me, for the purpose of carrying the dead and wounded. He replied that the mob would kill him if he did, and that he dare not do it. He was informed that he would be protected if he went, but if he refused he would be instantly shot.

The horses were specedily harnessed, and the body put into the carriage. The mob at this time commenced firing on us from the houses. We at once commenced searching the house, while my skirmishers drove the rioters back from every window and from the roofs. The houses were searched from cellar to roof. The mob made a desperate fight, and evidently seemed to think that they could whip us. Every house that was used to conceal these rioters was cleared. A large number were killed, and several prisoners taken. We then marched to Second-avenue, where we found the mob in great force and concealed in houses. They fired on us from housetops and from windows, also from cross streets. We soon cleared the streets, and then commenced searching the houses. We searched thirteen houses, killed those within, that resisted, and took the remainder prisoners. Some of them fought like incarnate fiends, and would not surrender. All such were shot on the spot.

The soldiers captured a large number of revolvers of large size, which I allowed them to keep.

The mob at this place were well armed; nearly every one had some kind of fire-arms, and had one blunderbuss, which they fired on us.

If they had been cool and steady, they might have done us much harm. As it was, they fired wildly, running to a window and firing, and then retreating back out of danger.

When my soldiers once got into the houses, they made short work of it. The fight lasted about forty minutes, and was more severe than all the rest in which my command was engaged. There were none of my men killed.

Sergt. Cadge, of Company F, Twelfth Infantry, (my own,) was slightly wounded in the hand. Private Knouse was also slightly wounded.

The mob being entirely dispersed, we returned to headquarters.

I remained at headquarters till Saturday, when I was ordered by Gen. Canby to Fort Hamilton. I have since been informed by Mr. Acton, President of the Board of Police Commissioners, that our fight (that of Thursday night) had the effect of crushing the rioters in the City, and that there has been no trouble since.

I would respectfully call the attention of the General to the noble conduct of the officers who served with me on different occasions during the riot, and beg leave to mention their names, together with some of the non-commissioned officers.

First-Lieut. M. H. Stacey, 12th Infantry.
Capt. Rawolle, Aid-de-Camp, commanding artillery.
Capt. Shelley, Aid-de-Camp, commanding Fort Hamilton Permanent Guard.
Lieut. B. F. Ryer, 20th N. Y. artillery.
Lieut. R. F. Jones, 28th N. Y. battery.
Lieut. M. F. Chase, 28th N. Y. battery.
First Sergt. J. E. Putnam, Co. F, 12th infantry.
Sergt. R. W. Sampson, Co. F, 12th infantry.
Sergt. Frank Wolcott, Co. F, 12th infantry.
Sergt. Patrick Roach, Co. F, 12th infantry, had charge of the skirmishers, and behaved nobly.
Sergt. Pedro Cadro, Co. F, 12th infantry, who was slightly wounded on Thursday night.
Sergt. Kimball, of the Permanent Guard.

I do not know the names of the Sergeants of the other companies, but all, as well as privates, without exception, acted like veterans.

I am, Sir, very respectfully,
Your obedient servant,
H. R. PUTNAM,
Capt. 12th U. S. Infantry, Comdg Co. F, 2d Batt.

CRICKET.

St. George's Club vs. New-York Club.

These Clubs met together on Thursday for the first time in five years in a friendly contest of cricket. The match was between the second eleven of the two Clubs, and took place on the St. George's ground, Hoboken; and being a one-day's match, it was decided in favor of St. George by the result of the first innings, which was not finished till near sunset, the game standing 124 to 99.

St. George went first to the wickets about 11 o'clock, at the parade of Messrs. Ford and D. Wright; the latter was soon disposed of by a full pitched ball, and Mr. Kendall took his place, when some splendid play took place for a long time, Mr. Ford retiring for 17, in which was a 3 and 3 2s; Mr. Van Buren succeeded, and Mr. Kendall soon after retired for 24, among which were a 5, 4 and 4 2s, all got by remarkably fine play; young Geo. Wright joined Mr. Van Buren, who was run out after obtaining a well got 12, in which were a 3 and a couple of 2s; Mr. Cutebugh came on and assisted Wright in running up the score in very spiritedstyle, and the [illegible] 14 on the board, when Mr. Van Buren's [illegible] Messrs. Houghton and Mackie did not do much, but Mr. Vanderlip assisted Wright for some time in running up the score, and only retired after getting a 9 and a 3 2s on the score-book, by good cricket, Wright bringing out his bat for half a hundred and four, in which were 3 6s, 8 3s and 4 2s, got by his usual fine display of cricket—20 extras were added to the runs from the bat.

The New-Yorkers sent in Seely and Hall, who played carefully, but none of the others had not their usual fine form, and the only second innings made by Hall and Parker for 13 each. Mr. Kendall's bowling and Mr. Vanderlip's long-stopping were the principal features in the general good fielding of St. George; and the innings closed for only 69 from the bat and 30 sixteenes. The match was a very pleasant one, and both parties partook of a substantial dinner in the club house. A large number of other cricketers were also present to witness the match.

THE FOLLOWING IS THE SCORE.

THE TURF.

TROTTING MATCH AT FASHION COURSE.

Another contest took place yesterday between the three road horses, Wm. Miner, Biddy McGee and Thunder, for a purse and stake, mile heats, best 3 in 5, to wagons.

The horses were pretty evenly matched, Biddy being rather the favorite, and coming in first by a couple of lengths in the first heat; but on account of her driver breaking the reins of the Course by crossing the other horses from the outside to the inside place, and then taking the pole, the Judges decided to distance Biddy, and the other horses were placed, as they came over the score, Thunder first by four lengths. The three remaining heats were won by Miner, who came in three lengths ahead of Thunder on the second heat, and won the two other heats easily by half-a-dozen lengths.

Gen. Butler's Trot Against Dutchman's Time on the Fashion Course To-day.

The great match, in which Gen. Butler is backed by his owner to beat Dutchman's celebrated time of three miles under saddle in 7:32¼—Butler to go in harness—is exciting extraordinary attention in fast circles, as well as on the part of the public generally. It is twenty-four years since that wonderful feat was performed. Great interest is felt in the result, and not a few say, that because Flora Temple could not equal it, no other horse can; but even bets are freely offered by Butler's friends that he will win to-day.

The Flushing cars are advertised to carry all who are likely to attend.

These claims were laid over to be added to to-day's account. Exclusive of these, 214 claims have been filed—making 429 altogether.

Letter to the Clergy and Laity from Bishop Potter.

ORDER OF SERVICES TO BE USED ON NATIONAL THANKSGIVING.

The following letter has been addressed by Bishop Potter to the clergy and laity of New-York in regard to the day for national thanksgiving, the 6th of this month, with the order of service he recommends:

To the Clergy and Laity of the Diocese of New-York:

DEAR BRETHREN: The President of the United States having recommended that Thursday, the 6th day of August next, be set apart to be observed as a day for National thanksgiving, praise and prayer to Almighty God, on account of the signal favor recently vouchsafed to the efforts put forth in defence of our beloved country; and having suggested that our thanksgivings be accompanied with fervent prayer for all those who have been bereaved, or in any way afflicted in the course of the present deplorable rebellion, I beg to call your attention to that recommendation of our Chief Magistrate, and to express the hope that in your respective places of worship you will assemble on the day above mentioned, to render the homage due to the Divine Majesty for gracious interpositions in the nation's behalf, and to implore the blessing of Almighty God upon all our public counsels and efforts, and His grace and consolation for all those who are in any way afflicted or distressed through the calamities of war.

The order of services recommended to be used on this occasion will be appended to this letter.

Praying God to give you His blessing, I remain,

Your affectionate friend and brother in Christ,
HORATIO POTTER, Bishop of New-York.

JULY 22, 1863.

ORDER OF SERVICES RECOMMENDED BY THE BISHOP, TO BE USED IN THE DIOCESE OF NEW-YORK, ON THURSDAY, AUG. 6, 1863.

The service shall be that prescribed for the 6th day of August, except where it is hereby otherwise appointed.

Immediately before the General Thanksgiving shall be said the Special Prayers heretofore appointed to be used during the present National troubles, together with the prayer "for persons under affliction."

After the General Thanksgiving shall be said the collect which followeth:

O Almighty God, the Sovereign Commander of all the world, in whose hand is power and might, which none is able to withstand, we bless and magnify Thy great and glorious name for the late signal success of our efforts in defence of our country, the whole glory whereof we ascribe to Thee who art the only giver of victory. And we beseech Thee give us grace to improve this great mercies to Thy glory, the advancement of Thy gospel, the honor of our [illegible]

George Hunt or as the [illegible] view I take of this [illegible] me to pass upon the justice of the indictment any further than to hold that so far as the recognizance [illegible] entered into, and that he cannot now, or ever be allowed to question their validity or evade his responsibility under them.

This being so, and there being legally secured to these children a home, where the evidence shows they can be, and in all human probability will be, well provided for, and kindly and carefully brought up to some respectable trade or life, the case is one to be considered under the general equitable powers of this Court. The children are committed to the care and custody of the respondent.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

THE REBELLION.

The draft in this City is to be proceeded with on Monday next, the 3d inst. Orders to this effect have been issued by the Provost-Marshal General. It is understood that the Government is fully prepared for all emergencies.

Our advices from the theatre of war in Virginia are to the effect that Lee massed his forces at Culpepper on Wednesday, and made other preparations to give Gen. Meade battle on the Rappahannock.

Advices from the Southwest this morning are very important. Gen. Ransom's division of Gen. Grant's army, the departure of which down the Mississippi has already been announced, is said to be intended for direct operations against Mobile. The rebel army under Joe Johnston is believed to be a few miles west of Meridian, probably on the Southern and Meridian Railroad. He is expected to make the Mobile and Ohio Railroad, from Choctaw on the north to Mobile on the south, his line of defence. It is reported that he has received large reinforcements from Bragg's army. The State of Mississippi is thus virtually abandoned by the rebels, and there is a growing sentiment in favor of a return to the old Union. Advices from Port Hudson represent everything in that vicinity as quiet. The fortifications there are being strengthened, and the enlistment of negro troops is rapidly progressing. There was a rumor, on the 24th ult., that Gen. Weitzel had captured 3,000 rebels at Donaldsonville, and another that Brashear City, in the Teche country, had been recaptured by us—both of which are quite likely to be true. A complete system of mounted patrols has been established between Vicksburgh and New-Orleans, which, with the gunboats, will insure protection to all vessels passing up or down.

A fight took place at Lexington, Tenn., recently, between a National force under Col. Noxson and a rebel force under Col. Campbell, engaged in enforcing the rebel conscription in that vicinity. The rebels were routed, and Col. Campbell, with two Lieutenants, twenty-five privates and two cannon, were captured.

The rebels under Pegram and Scott, who recently advanced into Eastern Kentucky, at last accounts were rapidly retreating toward the Cumberland River, having been defeated at all points.

Gen. Gillmore, in an official report to the War Department, just published, puts his aggregate losses in all his operations thus far at 635 killed and wounded, and 550 missing. Many of the wounded, he says, will be able to return to duty in a week or ten days; while the health of the command is improving.

The Boston Traveller states that Col. Higginson, of the First South Carolina (colored) regiment, now on a brief visit to his home at Worcester, is sanguine of the capture of both Ports Wagner and Sumter. Whether the City of Charleston can hold out after the fall of its stronghold, remains to be determined. The general belief, however, is that the fall of Sumter settles the fate of the city. Col. Higginson had one side badly lamed by the concussion of a shell, but is rapidly recovering, and will soon resume the performance of his duties in the field.

The Navy Department has received information of the capture of two cotton-loaded blockade-runners off Mobile, and the capture or destruction of several others on the coast of Texas.

The steamship Morning Star, from New-Orleans on the 25th of July, brings word that Gen. Franklin arrived out on the 20th, and immediately proceeded to Baton Rouge. The Morning Star was ashore yesterday morning on Deal Beach in a heavy fog, but was expected to be got off again at high tide last evening. Her passengers were all landed safely, and have arrived in this City.

Advices from Bermuda to the 22d of July state that the pirate Florida was still in port, her departure having been delayed for the want of coal. She was getting a supply, however, from another rebel steamer, and was expected to leave in a day or two. It is believed that any United States cruiser of ordinary sailing qualities could capture her easily. From Nassau, we learn that the rebel steamer Beauregard, after an unsuccessful attempt to run into Charleston harbor, had returned to that port about the 25th of July.

GENERAL NEWS.

A dispatch from Harrisburgh to the Philadelphia Inquirer, dated the 30th of July, says: "Considerable excitement has been created here by the discovery of enormous frauds upon the Government during the recent army movements in this region consequent upon the rebel raid. The amounts are stated at millions of dollars. A number of prominent State politicians have been placed under arrest, and the subject will receive the most searching investigation by the War Department. The most corrupt practices have prevailed in horse contracts and in clothing and subsistence supplies. They threw the "shoddy" operators at Harrisburgh, in the Summer of 1861, entirely in the shade. Many of the same parties are implicated, and the gangs who have infested the State capital in the Winter have reaped a rich Summer harvest."

Jamaica advices state that Mr. Rublee, of New-York, Consul to Kingston, Jamaica, had arrived at that port. The experiment of cotton cultivation on the Clarendon estate in Jamaica had been highly successful.

The following were the only honorary degrees conferred at the recent commencement of Yale College: David G. Porter, (1857,) A. E.; Rev. Nathaniel W. Taylor, (1862,) Rev. Samuel Jessup, (1860,) A. M.; Rev. Paxton Hood, of Harvard University, LL. D.

The demand for the Popular Loan of the United States in this market, yesterday, amounted to $1,519,000. The Share market opened at a decline, but the tone of the market became important. Money easy. Gold, 129; Exchange, [illegible]

Breadstuffs were in United demand, yesterday, at advanced rates. Cotton has been extensively unsettled. Provisions were heavy and declining. A moderate business was transacted in Whisky, Fish, Tallow, Hops, Candles, Fruit, Molasses, Sugars, Rice and Tobacco. Hay and Petroleum were in fair request. A limited inquiry prevailed for Hides, Hemp, Chemicals, Dyewoods, Whalebone, Seeds, Spices, Wool, Feathers, Foreign Liquors and Naval Stores. Freights were bracker and firmer.

France and the South.

It seems quite certain that Louis Napoleon intends, if possible, to secure the recognition of the Southern Confederacy. He will do everything in his power to engage the co-operation of England. Failing in this, he will probably venture on his knowledge of her sympathies, and counting at least on her passive acquiescence, he will recognize the rebel Confederacy alone. We do not believe he can induce any considerable European State to join him; and the moment he is convinced of this, he will probably take independent action.

Louis Napoleon has put himself in such a position in regard to this continent, that he cannot very well avoid taking this step. He has conquered Mexico, and has undertaken the much more difficult task of establishing and maintaining a monarchical form of government, under a foreign Prince, upon the ruins of that Republic. He is not likely to deceive himself as to the magnitude of this undertaking. What the great Powers of Europe combined have found themselves unable to do for Greece, Louis Napoleon will have some difficulty in doing off-hand for Mexico. The transfer of Maximilian or of a Bonaparte to a throne in Mexico resting on French bayonets, will be the signal for wars which will desolate that country, revolutionize France, and convulse all Europe before they are closed. Some wit has said that bayonets are excellent for everything but to sit down on. The new King of Mexico will find the exception well taken.

If the American Union is restored, Louis Napoleon cannot hold his new conquest six months. His first necessity is to secure our disruption and break our power. In our judgment, he will certainly attempt it. He is not a man to venture blindly upon such great adventures as this in Mexico, nor to stop half-way in the accomplishment of whatever he attempts. He will take great risks in the effort to fortify himself by destroying us.

The Emperor has repeatedly and ostentatiously proclaimed his intense desire to stop the war now raging in this country, and his conviction that this will be the result of recognition. This is the argument he has repeatedly addressed to England. Our Government has more than once given France and all other nations to understand that any foreign interference whatever will only enlarge the sphere and prolong the duration of the war. We trust the President will deem this a fitting occasion to reiterate this warning in terms which cannot be misunderstood nor disregarded. We are not called upon to interfere in Mexico. So long as we continue to accredit our Minister to the Mexican Government, ignoring wholly the French usurpation, we make all the protest we are called on to make against that act. But if France interferes in our affairs by recognizing the Southern Confederacy and by corresponding acts of aid and sympathy, she places herself in an attitude of unfriendliness and hostility toward the United States, and must be treated accordingly. No one will understand this better than the Emperor Napoleon: he will not, therefore, be likely to take a decisive step in this matter until he is fully prepared to follow it up. If he recognizes the South, it will be with the determination to help the South: and if he resolves upon that, he will do it by a heavy blow aimed precisely at the point where it will tell most. New-York, in such an event, will be the most exposed spot on the Western Continent. We trust that those disaffected persons who are so zealous in arousing popular hostility against our own Government, will not lose sight of this new and impending danger. We shall not yet believe that even the most ultra of them all would be indifferent to the hostile intervention of a foreign Power.

The Draft.

It is announced from Washington that orders have been issued by the Provost-Marshal-General to complete the draft in this City immediately, and that drafting will be resumed here on Monday next.

The draft has been carried into effect in nearly every part of New-York State excepting its chief city, where it was begun three weeks ago to-day, but was interrupted by the mob on the 13th. It has also been carried out in Philadelphia, in Boston, and throughout the greater part of the region between the Ohio River and our Eastern boundary. It only remains that the Empire City assume its share of the burdens, and acquire its share of the honors, that appertain to the sustenance and grow of the armies that uphold the National flag and maintain the National honor.

We believe that all the authorities, National and State, will now energetically co-operate in this essential work. We have had discord enough, and suffered disgrace enough already. The supremacy of law and the maintenance of order are the prime conditions of New-York's existence. Every violation of them is terribly disastrous to our every interest. The business interests of New-York alone, not to speak of its honor, its good name and its patriotic character, have suffered beyond calculation from the riots. But the riots themselves showed that nine-tenths of our citizens were determined to uphold the laws.

The hardships of the draft have been absurdly exaggerated. It will take but a small fraction of our able-bodied population, and these all young men. They will be promptly paid, their families will be provided for, and every reasonable ground of complaint will [illegible]

[illegible] are impossible, they are just.

France and Reconstruction.

We are having a great many revelations of the secret motives of Vice-President Stephens' attempted visit to Washington. Three or four of our contemporaries know all about it, and are not in the least unwilling to tell all they know. One curious feature of their disclosures is that no two of them agree in a single particular; and another is that each paper ascribes precisely such a motive to the Vice-President's mission as suits its own views of public policy. The Herald, for example, announces that Mr. Stephens wanted to go to Washington to inform Mr. Lincoln that, if he would turn the "Radicals" out of the Cabinet, the Confederates would consent to peace. The Daily News has discovered, through the State Department at Washington, that Mr. Stephens wanted to inform the President that, unless he speedily stopped the war, the Confederates intended to call in the aid of Louis Napoleon; and the Tribune, which for a time swallowed and magnified the story of the News, has now received a special revelation from Richmond, to the effect that the Vice-President desired to announce to the National Government that, if the Union men persisted in arming negroes, the rebels would do the same.

All these speculations are amusing enough. But they are mischievous, because they fill the public mind with absurd and false notions concerning the temper and purposes of the Southern rebels. We have made a good many inquiries on this subject in the quarter likely to be best informed, and we think we can say, with perfect certainty of its truth, that neither the President nor anybody else in authority at Washington has the slightest reason to believe that the rebel Vice-President had any other errand than that which was ascribed to him in the published letter of Jefferson Davis. No hint has reached any Department in Washington, from any quarter entitled to confidence, that he dreamed of opening any negotiation for peace, or of discussing the negro question, or of threatening to surrender the Confederacy to Louis Napoleon. Of course he may have intended to do any one or all of these things; but nobody in this section of the country knows, or is likely to know, anything authentic on the subject.

So far as we may judge from his own declarations, Mr. Vice-President Stephens had no thought of proposing terms of peace. In his speech at Charlotte, delivered no longer ago than the 17th of July, he was very emphatic on this point—declaring that no peace was to be thought of except on the basis of Southern independence. So far as we have any means of judging, this is still the settled and unshaken sentiment of the rebel rulers. They will continue the war just so long as they can force the people into the ranks of the army, and compel them to fight. They have every conceivable motive, personal and political, for persisting in this course.

Peace, when it comes, will not come through any action or application of the Confederate Government. It will come through the popular action of some one or more of the States which now form the Confederacy. When the people of any one of these States find themselves deprived of the pressure of the rebel army, they may throw off the authority of the Confederate Government, which will then be only nominal, call a Convention and apply, of their own motion, and in their own way, for readmission to the Union. Whenever the people of any State, say Louisiana, or Tennessee, or Mississippi, or North Carolina, shall by some authentic act make such application, we have no doubt that it will receive the prompt, liberal and generous consideration of our Government. We cannot doubt that any such State would be heartily welcomed back to its old place in the Union and again put on the footing of "the most favored nations." And when this step shall have been taken by one State, the example will be followed by more; and in that way the Confederacy will crumble much more rapidly than it was built up.

We do not look, therefore, to any mission from Richmond for proposals of peace or for the initial steps to a reconstruction of the Union. The rebel rulers are not the men to take any such steps. We look to the action of the people in some one or more of the Southern States; and unless the signs of the times greatly deceive us, we shall not have to look very long.

The Immedicable Wound.

A rebel newspaper draws comfort (such as it is) from the loss of Vicksburgh and Port Hudson by declaring that far more consequence has always been attached to their retention than was deserved. The true way to have blockaded the Mississippi River, says this rebel organ, was to have waylaid its banks with sections of flying artillery—dashing in, firing on passing boats, and disappearing in the backwoods—at any of the "thousand points" on its course susceptible of such operations.

The logic of the rebel organ does not appear to make much impression on the public mind of the South. The lamentation over the loss of Vicksburgh is everywhere loud and inconsolable. The capture of Port Hudson, in itself a severe disaster, seems almost wholly lost sight of in view of the more crushing calamity at Vicksburgh. Jeff. Davis seems to have regarded the loss of the place that he declared impregnable and vital to the success of the Confederacy as a supreme national misfortune, for he followed up the receipt of the unwelcome news by a proclamation of fasting and prayer and humiliation.

It is an afterthought of the rebels to make light of what has so sensibly crushed and bewildered them. Neither the reflection that a better way might or should have been hit upon to blockade the river, affords real solace in the agony of disappointment and despair; nor the added consideration of the same rebel authority, that the loss of Vicksburgh "will prove odd in the policy of Abraham of appointing commissions, when to high commands." Such themes as this last are needful, not only to the Richmond Government but to all others. But it is not possible for the Confederates, in the present exhausted condition of their resources, to pay so dearly for military instruction. The fall of Vicksburgh and Port Hudson has cost the Confederacy over 40,000 soldiers. A total of 40,000 fighting men, and the loss of the command of the Mississippi River, is a dear price to pay for learning how the river might have been held! The knowledge comes when it is no longer available—the Confederates can only feel that they have been amassing experience and wisdom not for themselves but for future generations.

It is a noteworthy fact, that though Vicksburgh was captured nearly a month ago, and the fact instantly known throughout the Confederacy, the wails of the Press over the loss are deeper now than they have been at any time before. The blow seems at first to have produced stupor; but, as consciousness revives, the sense of irreparable disaster grows deeper and more acutely painful. We published yesterday quite a mass of extracts from Southern journals, the chief burden of which was sorrow for the fall of Vicksburgh. In view of such evidences of rebel demoralization and despair, the nation has reason to rejoice in renewing the necessary efforts for the final overthrow of the public enemy.

Cæsarism in America.

The performances of the Copperhead politicians during the last year will furnish a curious and instructive chapter to the history of this war. Being most of them born and bred in Free States, with every possible reason in blood, training and association, to love Liberty and hate Slavery, they have set themselves with a bitterness of which there are but few examples, even in the story of intestine strife, to aid a band of unscrupulous conspirators, who loathe and revile them while accepting their help, in their nefarious attempts to make the Slave Code a part of our common law, and place slaveholding on the footing in every part of the Union with property and family. Being Americans, too, and most of them unbiest with a single claim to anybody's respect, except their possession of American citizenship, they have endeavored by all means legal and illegal to promote the dismemberment of the Republic, for the purpose of establishing on its ruins two new States, one of them an armed oligarchy, avowedly based on "Slavery, subordination and government," in lieu of "liberty, equality and fraternity," and the other a shattered, broken-down Democracy, betrayed by its own citizens, and scorned and reviled by foreigners. They have, moreover, come out in the face of day and informed the world in set terms that twenty millions of Americans engaged in a war with five millions of rebels, have, after two campaigns, been "whipped" so thoroughly, as to make peace and submission not simply expedient but necessary. We believe that modern history does not contain any record of similar degradation.

There was still one lower depth than this, and into that they descended. In order to contribute still further to the humiliation of their country, they made themselves the tools of a foreign despot in his attempt to substitute monarchical for republican institutions on this continent, and at our very doors, as if in mockery of our distress, and with the avowed object of contributing to the extirpation in America, as in Europe, of the great principles of free government, to which we owe all our greatness and all our happiness. This is no vague accusation. The World, the leading Copperhead organ of this City, has, during the last fifteen months, vied with the Moniteur and the Constitutionnel, and in language of slavish adulation—happily new to American ears—in defending the invasion of Mexico, and lauding to the skies an enterprise which has always been notoriously, and is now confessedly, a crusade for the propagation of that new political contrivance of "the brethren of the Elysee," which their hack writers call "Cæsarisme."

What is Cæsarism? our readers will ask. It is neither more nor less than a revival, for the government of modern States, of the doctrines and practices of the Roman Empire in its later and worst stages—in the days not simply of Augustus and Marcus Antoninus, but of Nero, and Tiberius, and Caligula. It is, in short, an absolute and irresponsible despotism, which finds for the display of its powers, not barbarous tribes struggling feebly into civilization, but the highly cultivated, refined communities, like Rome of the second century or France of to-day; and it is the opinion of the "Cæsarists" that it flourishes best on soil that has been previously prepared, like that of Rome, by democratic excesses, failures and anarchy. Louis Napoleon, as is well known, loves to consider himself as playing the part of Julius Cæsar, and is devoting the leisure hours of many years to recounting and embellishing the exploits of his great prototype; and his disciples look forward with joy and confidence to a long line of Domitians, Neros and Vespasians reigning in unbridled supremacy over endless generations of Frenchmen, equal, as between themselves, in everything, but above all in the depth and slaviishness of their submission to "the Prince."

If anybody imagines this to be a fancy sketch, we can only refer him to a recent work, entitled "Imperial Roman Society, from Augustus to the Antonines, in its Relations with Modern Society," written by M. Dupois-Guchan, Procureur Imperial at Nantes, and setting forth the doctrines of this new school with great explicitness, earnestness and erudition. The theory of this author is precisely that which de Tocqueville so much dreaded, that the tendencies and aspirations of modern democracy are all satisfied by perfect equality of condition; that the desire for liberty, meaning thereby the possession of political privileges and the right of managing their own affairs, is only a fond dream of visionaries, and contrary to the nature of the people, who are always ready to exchange it, and that offer the wide period of incredible anarchy which always comes, sooner or later, in the history of Republics, it will always seek security for its property and peace for its soul in the arms of a despot, who shall rule it absolutely, not by divine right, like the old feudal monarchs, but by the "volonte nationale," as France is now ruled, and as Mexico will be ruled shortly. According to M. Dupois-Guchan, the Roman "Emperors reformed the corruption of the Roman people. The people applied to the Cæsars for the supply of their real needs, and never broke out against them unless they were hungry. The Republic had given them glory, but with it poverty; it had given them a great name, but had denied them a livelihood; the Cæsars left them their pride, and added subsistence. They had under the Cæsars not simply bread, but amusement. They were less flattered than under the Republic, but they were better taken care of. * * They took part in the jeux of the land in the full dignity of Roman citizens. They had the solving of that true equality so much preferable to the false liberty which made them the slaves of the rich and of the Tribunes. When necessary, the Cæsars spoke to them as masters, as was proper and becoming, but they treated them like children, and did not use them under pretense of honoring them." Brutus and Cicero our author denounces as "oligarchs and obstacles." He tells us that "if Rome had not our industrial activity, neither had it our chronic disturbance, and our physical and moral recklessness;" that "there was to be found amongst Roman slaves depths of sentiment and devotion that may be looked for in vain in modern workshops." From the lavish eulogies which he showers on the Cæsars, we have not space to make extracts. Their nature may be guessed when we say that he speaks of Nero's murder of his mother, Agrippina, as a "family difficulty." He denounces American "individualism" as "monstrous;" and, finally, he bursts out in the following rhapsody:

"What can be more delightful, in fact, than to live in a tranquil Empire! that to taste of that happiness which Pliny the Younger describes as consisting in doing nothing, and being nobody—ceasse, et nolle esse, when desirable, to be idle, or to wile away time as one pleases; of enjoying, like Seneca, dignity in your leisure. Within rare exceptions imperial Rome offers a picture of hyper tranquility!"

M. Dupois-Guchan is not a poetaster nor a "charmer," but a lawyer and functionary, of learning and distinction, expressing the ideas of which the politicians of the Tuileries consider themselves the chosen propagandists. They have subjected Tunis to the operation already. They are on the point of extending it to Mexico; and we have only to read their books and newspapers to know that they consider the United States to be struggling in that final agony from which the patient finds no relief, save in the paternal arms of a Cæsar. The fact that they have found writers calling themselves Americans to support them in their crusade, of course will confirm them in the belief that we are ripe unto rottenness for the application of their detestable theories. But we have the consolation of knowing that they have found them amongst men who see in the disasters of American armies, and the confusion and distress of their own countrymen, only matter for congratulation and delight. As long as they make no more valuable perverts than these, we can witness their propagandism without a particle of apprehension; and we are satisfied that we only express the feelings of every man in the United States, who has still a spark of the old fire in his composition, when we say that we still cherish the hope of driving them to seek some other field than the soil of this Continent for the diffusion of the joys of "Cæsarisme."

Crowding the Mourners.

The slaves of the South must be getting rather crowded. Thousands were taken from Kentucky to Tennessee for fear of our armies; and when the army entered Tennessee, tens of thousands were driven down into the Cotton States. When, again, our armies began operating on the Yazoo and along the Western rim of Mississippi, the planters of that great Cotton and Slave State felt their negro property was endangered, and sent them into the interior of the State. But after the fall of Vicksburgh and the capture of the State Capital, it was seen that no part of Mississippi was safe from Abolition influence, and the rebels began crowding the slaves eastward into Alabama and Georgia.

While this has been going on in the West, the same thing has been going on to some extent in the East; not, however, to as great a degree, for the reason that our territorial gains in the East have been very limited. But many of the Virginia planters felt that, while there was such a contingency possible as defeat for the rebel army of Lee, their slaves were not altogether safe; and so, during the last two years, many thousands have been driven down to the Carolinas and Georgia. Those on the coast of North Carolina, again, have been driven into the interior; and our possession of the dessert slave region of the South, the sea margin of South Carolina and Georgia, forced the heavy planters there to take their slaves up country. So, and for the same reason, the slaves have forcibly evacuated a great part of Florida.

We believe, that of all the slaves of the eight rebel States this side of the Mississippi River, nine-tenths are to-day in the Carolinas, Georgia and Alabama.

The telegraph brings from Memphis the statement that the "removal of the slaves from Mississippi into Alabama and Georgia has been carried to such an extent that the Governors of those States have issued proclamations forbidding their further introduction, and Gen. Johnston's pickets are said to have turned a large number back." It is really a very serious question for those States; and the quandary they are in is one out of which you cannot help them. If, on the one hand, they do not [illegible] their slaves, the country [illegible] of the strong hand [illegible] their Gods; and on the other hand the crowding of such a vast mass of blacks into such a space, and that densely populated by white bodied whites, is not a very safe or pleasant experiment. The greater part of these slaves have learned by this time that the war which is raging around them, and driving them from one place to another, has something to do with their freedom.

It is difficult to give any advice to the rebel Governors and Generals in the premises—and particularly when it is considered that we have a Union military force operating in Northern Alabama, and that another force, under Gen. Herron, is said to be marching for Mobile, in Southern Alabama, which, in turn, will flank all the rebels as well as rebels in Mississippi, and compel also the Alabama slaves to push for Georgia or submit to military emancipation. Each of these three States—Mississippi, Alabama and Georgia—before the opening of the war, had about the same number of slaves—each nearly half a million—and, considering the numbers that have been driven down into them from the North, they must altogether have a population of blacks exceeding a million and a half. When all of these are crowded into the space between the Alabama and Savannah rivers, the blacks will outnumber the whites as three to one. Of the two evils, it is possible that Johnston, Seymour and Brown have chosen the least.

The Labors of Grant.—People have been wondering what the ever-active, never-tiring worker, Gen. Grant, has been doing since the Fourth of July. He has not been airing his honors, nor parading his laurels, nor blowing his trumpet—nor even like Hercules, after the twelve labors, has he subsided. The telegraph relieves our anxiety for him. "Gen. Grant has perfected a complete system of mounted patrols between Vicksburgh and New-Orleans, which, with the gunboats, affords ample protection to vessels." Thus has this great soldier put the finishing touch to the gigantic work which was begun by him two years ago.

IMPORTANT FROM WASHINGTON

The Draft in New-York City to Proceed on Monday Next.

OUR SPECIAL WASHINGTON DISPATCHES

Washington, Friday, July 24.

THE DRAFT TO PROCEED.

Orders have been issued by Provost-Marshal-General Fry to complete the draft in New-York City immediately, and the drafting will again commence on Monday next. The Government is fully prepared for any emergency which may arise.

THE REBELS DISCOURAGED.

A letter from a distinguished officer of the Army of the Potomac, dated Warrenton, July 22, says:

"The rebels are very much discouraged. Seven deserters from a Mississippi regiment came in day before yesterday, and stated that there was no use in fighting any more, now that Mississippi had "gone up." We ought to have Richmond by the middle of September."

A CAVALRY BUREAU.

A Cavalry Bureau will shortly be attached to the War Department. The Bureau will have charge of the organization and equipment of the cavalry forces of the army, and the provisions for mounting and remounting. The purchase of all horses for the cavalry service will be made by officers of the Quartermaster's Department, under direction of the Chief of the Cavalry Bureau. Inspections of horses offered for the cavalry service will be made by cavalry officers. Depots will be established for the recruiting, organization and discipline of cavalry recruits and new regiments, and for the collection, care and training of cavalry horses. These depots will be under the general charge of the Cavalry Bureau. The enormous expense attending the maintenance of the cavalry arm points to the necessity of greater care and more judicious management on the part of cavalry officers, that their horses may be constantly kept up to the standard of efficiency for service. Great neglects of duty in this connection are to be attributed to officers in command of cavalry troops. It is the design of the War Department to correct such neglects by dismissing from the service officers whose inefficiency and inattention result in the deterioration and loss of public animals under their charge.

RUNNING THE BLOCKADE.

Acting Attorney-General Coxey has given an opinion, in response to an inquiry of the Secretary of State, that persons dispatching American vessels from our own ports in ballast to neutral ports, and thence to run the blockade, are liable to punishment under the second section of the act of 17th of July, 1862, Chapter 195, "To suppress Insurrection," &c., whether such vessels actually run the blockade, or after leaving the neutral port are captured in the attempt to run the blockade, or whether they even fail to reach the neutral port. Such vessels are liable to capture as prizes of war from the moment they leave our own port, and this right of capture impesing on our cruisers the duty of capture. The mere fact of starting such vessels on their guilty errand, irrespective of the point they may reach on the voyage, amounts to assisting the rebellion within the statute.

THE BALTIMORE AND OHIO RAILROAD.

W. P. Smith, Master of Transportation of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, telegraphs here to-night that the road will be open to Wheeling within two days. The rebels destroyed six miles of the track near Martinsburgh, besides most of the bridges between there and Wheeling.

GEN. HOOKER.

It is understood that Gen. Hooker will shortly be assigned to an active command in the field.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

By order of the War Department, the non-commissioned officers of a company cannot be appointed until the muster of the company is completed, nor can they be mustered in until the companies have the full quota of enlisted men.

A BOUNTY DECISION.

On an appeal of J. C. Wetmore, Agent of the State of Ohio, Secretary Stanton has decided that in the case of Sergeant Quesser, of the Fifth Ohio, who had served two years in the ranks, and was discharged for promotion, he was entitled to his bounty of one hundred dollars, the same as any non-commissioned officer or private who had served two years and been honorably discharged on account of disability. This decision covers all similar cases, whether past or in the future.

APPOINTMENT.

Wm. H. Seward, Jr., New-York, nephew of the Secretary of State, has been appointed a fourth clerk in the Paymaster's Department.

COURTS MARTIAL.

Maj. James Gillen, of the Eighteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry, was tried on charges of [illegible] and conduct [illegible]. Of the first he was found guilty, and of the second not guilty, although the [illegible] upon which the charge of the Tribune was founded, established. He was mustered in as cashiered and the finding of the Court-Martial fully exonerated.

"The acknowledgment of the Court in the above case was approved by the Major-General commanding the Department of Washington, on account of the extraordinary irregularities in the conduct of the proceedings shown; that the accused was found guilty, and brought discredit upon himself and the service. The President directs that, as recommended by the Department Commander, he be dismissed the service; and Maj. Jesse Grimes, Eighteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry, accordingly ceases to be an officer in the United States service since the 30th day of July, 1863."

Private Gideon Pearson, One Hundred and Fortieth New-York Volunteers, for striking his superior officer, and for using opprobrious language, was sentenced to be shot. The sentence was commuted to the imprisonment at hard labor on the Government works during the war.

The Productions and Commerce of Brazil.

Boston, Friday, July 31.

A meeting of the Government of Board of Trade was held in the Chamber by the Board this afternoon, to listen to an exposition, by Rev. J. C. Fletcher, Secretary of Legation at Brazil under the Polkinn Administration, on the productions and commerce of that country, and on the importance of establishing closer and more intimate commercial relations between Brazil and the United States. He discoursed at length upon the great agricultural resources of Brazil, the amazing fertility and capabilities of the vast Valley of the Amazon, one million square miles larger than the Valley of the Mississippi; the unlimited capacity of that whole region for the production of coffee, cotton and sugar, and the great trade which would arise and explode upon the Mississippi under, which we have, for the first time, a direct steam communication from Brazil, and, recently, of American houses there for the sale and exchange of American products. For most of these, our export trade was falling away, and continued at great disadvantage, while England, through means of her steam lines and agencies, monopolized houses, reaching from Lisbon to every Brazilian port, was enlarging her trade every day. He spoke feelingly upon the great advantages that would result from a closer and more intimate feeling of the prevailing friendly feeling of Brazil toward the United States, and of the liberality of the Brazilian Government, which stood pledged to subsidize with liberality any American steamer that may be owned by American citizens, and should be run established to perform this service. The remarks were listened to with great attention, and a series of resolutions were unanimously adopted expressive of the high interest with which the Board regarded the representations of the speaker, of their appreciation of the liberal proposition of the Brazilian Minister of Department to open the Amazon and its tributaries to American commerce, and also to subsidize an American steamship line from the United States to Brazil.

Quite a number of positions were offered immediately, and the highest interest was manifested throughout the meeting.

Alexander Tassey, Esq., Brazilian Vice-Consul, warmly responded the remarks of Rev. Mr. Fletcher.

Wreck of the Whaler Newark.

Boston, Friday, July 31.

Capt. NATHAN L. SMITH, of the whaling bark Newark, which sailed from New-Bedford in October, arrived in this port yesterday in charge of his vessel in the Island of Java, describing the total wreck of his vessel in the Indian Archipelago in April last. The Newark had 1,300 barrels sperm oil. The officers and crew escaped in boats. The vessel and cargo were insured in New-Bedford for nearly $80,000.

Quarantine at Gotenburgh.

Department of the Secretaries, Quarantine, Gotenburgh, July 8.

Cholera Asiatic, No. 5.—During the months of August and September, no cargo will be allowed to be discharged from any ship of the foreign ports, mentioned as being infected at Gotenburgh. The health of the mentioned nations and citizens of this neutrality require the stringent enforcement of this order; and any violation of it reported to these headquarters will meet with vexatory and severe punishment. By command of A. C. ALTEMAN, Colonel Thirty-sixth regiment, Commanding Post.

The Draft for Yates, Livingston and Ontario Counties.

Correspondence of the New-York Times.

Geneseo, N. Y., Thursday, July 30, 1863.

The draft now in progress here, for Yates, Livingston and Ontario Counties, will be completed to-morrow. The drawings have been held from day to day at the old Court-house, which has been crowded most of the time with spectators. The utmost good feeling and harmony prevails. Yesterday the quota of this town was drawn. The blind man, who, to render assurance doubly sure, was "blindfolded," spelled seven lawyers, viz.: Messrs. Smith, District Attorney; Moses, Surrogate; Gardner, son of Gen. Gardner; Prentiss, Parsons, Hyde and Gardner—four Republicans, Drs. Hayes, Rodgers, Carson and Carr—Rev. Mr. Lauderbaugh, Pastor of the Episcopal Church; Wm. McLaughlin, Principal of the Genesseo Academy; C. Hall, Banker; and Messrs. Pierson and O'Grady, merchants. Last evening the conscripts formed in procession, with drum and fife, after having procured all the old guns, pistols, military equipments, &c., in the village, and paraded through all the streets, halting in front of every conscript's dwelling and delivering three hearty cheers. They afterward assembled in the Park, and listened to brief addresses from Messrs. Moses and Parsons. Fireworks and cannon were likewise brought to bear, and the performances were kept up until after midnight. Nearly the whole village turned out to witness them. J.

The Draft.

New-York, Tuesday, July 28, 1863.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Will you please urge upon the Government the duty of fixing upon a time when the draft shall take place in our City, or better, of putting it in immediate operation. Many have engagements some hundreds of miles from the City which they are desirous of fulfilling, but are compelled to stay at home, not knowing if they went but that the drawings might be postponed, and they would have to come immediately back. Such is my own case, and I certainly wish the Government would speak. But aside from this, every day's delay is bringing the Administration into contempt. There are not wanting those who go about declaring that the authorities dare not enforce the draft, after the opposition manifested to it by the "friends" of Gov. Seymour. Loyal men feel insecure under such a state of things; and it does seem as if the mob had triumphed and the Government was paralyzed the longer they delay action. What is wanted, is an explicit declaration, at once of what is to be done, and let it be the enforcement of the draft, even if there is only one man to be drafted to fill our quota. J. McV.

The Draft in Philadelphia.

Philadelphia, Friday, July 31.

Two sons of Gen. Meade were drafted to-day.

Appeal of the Committee in Behalf of Colored People.

To the Merchants and other Employers of Laborers in New-York:

The undersigned, an Executive Committee appointed at a large and influential meeting of the merchants of New-York, to dispense the funds contributed by them in aid of the colored sufferers by the late riot, have been instructed by the General Committee to address their fellow-citizens in relation to the objects of their care.

The Committee have learned with deep regret that, in various ways, obstacles have been thrown in the attempts of the colored laborers to resume their wonted occupations, cases having occurred where men who had labored faithfully for years in one situation, had been refused a reinstatement by their employers, lest, forsooth, by so doing they might be subjected to the overzealous wrath of the mob. Street railroads, by which many had been accustomed to pass from their distant homes to their place of employment, have refused them permission to ride, and have thus impaired their ability to perform their customary duties, and earn their needful pay. The undersigned, in behalf of the merchants of this great metropolis, respectfully but urgently call upon their fellow-citizens to unite in protecting our injured and persecuted class whose cause the Committee advocates.

The full and equal right of the colored man to work for whoever chooses to employ him, and the full and equal right of any citizen to employ whoever he will, is too manifest to need proof. Competition is indispensable to the successful management of commercial business. Surely the energetic, enterprising merchants of this City will not allow any interference with these rights. On the other hand, should our colored population, from a want of firmness on the part of the white, be deprived of their just rights to earn an honest living, they would become a dependent, pauper race.

The Committee, therefore, earnestly appeal to the good feelings, to the sense of justice, to the manliness of every employer, of whatever creed, or country, or color, to aid them in the execution of the important trust committed to them by the Merchants of New-York.

Some Facts Concerning Mr. Arnold Harris and His Property.

Mr. ARNOLD HARRIS, formerly proprietor of the Washington Hotel, is now enjoying the hospitality of the United States Government, having been captured under suspicious circumstances on board the rebel steamer Rose, as she was attempting to run the blockade near Wilmington, N. C.

A brief sketch of Mr. Harris's operations may not be uninteresting. At the time of the battle of Bull Run Mr. Harris was the owner of $150,000 worth of stock in a prominent steamship company of this City, and of a house in Washington estimated at $30,000. He also owned a very large property in the South. To save his possessions in each section of the disrupted Union was the desire of his heart. He accomplished it by transferring the company shares and the house to his wife; and having made all things thus secure he prepared to travel Dixieward. An opportunity soon came. Col. Cammer, the commanding officer of the Seventy-ninth New-York Volunteers, and brother of the then Secretary of War, was killed at the battle of Bull Run, and Mr. Harris, accompanied by a Mr. McGraw, volunteered to search for the body.

Permission was granted, but Harris, after getting beyond the lines, absconded, leaving the body to take care of itself, his wife to look out for his property, and going straight South, that he might appear in the eyes of the faithful, and thus save his freedom and property. In this he was successful, and up to the time of his recent capture nothing was heard of or from him. His wife resided here and in Philadelphia until a few months since, when she removed to Kentucky. A short time since she was assessed upon property to the value of $50,000, but through some means the amount was reduced to $20,000. The Washington House was bought a few days since by Gen. Sickles, at a cost of $25,000.

Arrivals in the City.

Jefferson Reeves, of Washington; J. C. Reeves, Jr., of Washington; H. H. Ellis and family, of New-Orleans, and W. Jerrison, of New-Orleans, are stopping at the Astor House.

A. E. Kent, Chicago; C. H. Fry and family, of Kentucky; G. B. White and E. J. Mason, of Pittsburgh; A. J. Salisbury, of Baltimore; E. B. Conley, of Louisville; J. J. Pleasant, of Ohio, and E. Walls, of St. Louis, are stopping at the St. Nicholas.

Col. Geo. P. Ihrie, U. S. A.; Leonard Grover, of Washington; D. Bidwell, New-Orleans; J. S. Edger, St. Louis; R. F. Barton, of California, and Col. Fonte, of New-Orleans, are stopping at the Metropolitan Hotel.

—Brig.-Gen. Whipple has been ordered to Pottsville, Penn., probably on duty connected with the enforcement of the draft.

SHORT'S KNAPSACK SHINGING.—The question of alleviating a soldier's hardships is one that in these days comes home to every able-bodied man in the community, and one that has been anxiously canvassed in hundreds of thousands of families during the many months of war. Many schemes are projected by the kind-hearted and philanthropic, some of which are practically useful, while others serve rather to encumber the soldier than lighten his burdens. But on Saturday we were shown an improved knapsack—the improvement having especial reference to the mode of slinging—that deserves to take the first place among modern inventions for the comfort of the marching soldier. The material of the knapsack is water-proof duck, and by a simple adjustment of the straps the burden is poised upon the centre of gravity, without bringing any pressure upon the heart or breathing organs. The relief that this arrangement brings can be appreciated to its fullest extent only by those who have borne the old Government knapsacks during a march of wearisome miles, until tempted to throw it by the wayside with its indispensable contents. Thirty thousand of these improved knapsacks have already been brought into use, and the testimony in their favor is unanimous and overwhelming. It is not too much to say that no new regiments should be sent into the field without them, and that they should be substituted for those already in use as speedily as possible. We have no doubt that our State authorities will secure this result as soon as the merits of the improvement are brought to their attention.—Providency Journal.

UNION STATE CONVENTION.

A Union State Convention will be held at Syracuse, on the 22 day of September next, at 11 o'clock A. M., to nominate State Officers and to transact such other business as may properly come before the Convention.

All persons who are in favor of unconditionally sustaining the Administration in a vigorous prosecution of the war until the rebellion is finally suppressed, and of maintaining public order and the enforcement of the laws, are invited to unite in the selection of three delegates from each Assembly District to attend such State Convention. In counties and districts where there are Republican and Union or other Committees of Organization friendly to the Administration, they are requested to unite in one call.

The officers to be nominated are:

A Secretary of State,
A Comptroller,
A State Treasurer,
An Attorney-General,
A State Engineer and Surveyor,
A Canal Commissioner,
An Inspector of State Prisons, and
A Judge of the Court of Appeals.

It is also recommended that a Mass Ratification Meeting of the loyal young men of the State be held at Syracuse on the 23 day of September, 1863, at 10 o'clock A. M.

AGAIN NEW TESTIMONY.

HEAR.

Harlem, July 28, 1863.

I have been deaf for over TWENTY-FIVE YEARS, and Dr. VON EISENBERG operated on both ears without the slightest pain—a thing that I could not believe could be done. I now hear well, and feel as I never did for the last twenty years. The dexterity and skill with which the operation was performed evince the highest practical ability. I hear perfectly. It is now over a month since the operation, and I continue to feel as well as ever.

WILLIAM LIDDLE,
Harlem, 126th-st., between 3d and 4th-avs.

New-York, May 5.

I was entirely deaf in my left ear, accompanied by a discharge. I placed myself under Dr. VON EISENBERG'S care, who, by his great skill, restored me to perfect hearing, in the short space of a few minutes, without giving me the slightest pain, and the discharge has ceased entirely. The Eustachian Tube, which was obliterated, is quite open, and I feel that the air-passages perform its functions. I am amply satisfied, and recommend every one suffering from impaired hearing to place themselves under the treatment of this eminent and successful physician.

THOMAS GRANAN, No. 239 6th-av."

New-York, May 7, 1863.

I have great pleasure in testify to the skill of Dr. VON EISENBERG. I went into his office almost completely deaf, and came out with my perfect hearing. It is nearly twelve months since, and the hearing is perfect. The operation, which lasted two or three minutes in each of my ears, gave me no pain whatever. I, with confidence, recommend all sufferers to place themselves under Dr VON EISENBERG'S conquering skill.

SAMUEL C. HUNT,
No. 5 Mercer-st., Greenpoint, L. I."

No. 138 Madison-st., New-York, Feb. 8, 1863.

I have been completely deaf in one ear, and partially so in the other, for above seventeen years, with a dangerous discharge from both ears, combined with continual rumbling noise in the head, for which I have been treated by a most eminent practitioner in the City without the slightest relief.

I consulted Dr. Von Eisenberg, but I must candidly say that I had no faith in his success when I did so. It is, therefore, due to Dr. Von Eisenberg to acknowledge that I am entirely cured; also, that he displayed that skill and knowledge which have procured for him such an unrivaled reputation. As I have had an opportunity of comparing his mode of treatment with that of others, I can truly state that it is not only superior, but the principle which describes mode of restoring the hearing are, in my opinion, certain.

JOHN TAYLOR.

New-York, July 24, 1863.

This certifies that my mother has been for some time afflicted with partial deafness, suffering from pain, and rumbling noises in the head, together with other indications of a total loss of hearing. Dr. Von Eisenberg removed from her ears a great quantity of matter, together with congealed blood, relieving her immediately, and all without pain. It is with grateful thanks that I give this testimony to his skill.

CARROLL J. POST, No. 32 South-st.

SIGHT RESTORED.

June 25, 1863.

My daughter brought me to Dr. Von Eisenberg almost completely blind in both eyes. I could not bear the pain nor the light. I am completely cured by Dr. Von Eisenberg, and called now to express my gratitude to the Doctor for his skill and unremitting attention, by which I recovered one of the most precious senses to me after being deprived of it for four years. It is only due to Dr. Von Eisenberg to state that I have tried several physicians in vain. I shall be happy to bear personal testimony to Dr. Von Eisenberg's surprising success to any lady or gentleman who will call on me.

HUGH GILLON,
No. 78 Sulton-st., Brooklyn.

CHRONIC CATARRH CURED.

READ

New-York, March 20, 1863.

"This is to certify, that I have suffered from very severe CHRONIC CATARRH, with a dull heaviness in the head. I felt my nose completely stopped up accompanied by continual soreness of the throat, the chills stealing over me with occasional hot flushes, a great tightness of the chest and pain, as much so, that every one thought it was consumption. Having heard of the great cures performed by Dr. Von Eisenberg, I consulted him with but little hope of a cure. I am now happy to be enabled to add my testimonial to the great number already in the Doctor's possession as to his scientific and successful mode of treatment, as he showed me that skill and knowledge which have procured for him so great a reputation. I am so entirely restored to perfect health that I do most sincerely recommend all sufferers from CHRONIC CATARRH and SORE THROAT to apply at once to Dr. Von Eisenberg with a certainty of lasting relief."

DRAKE'S PLANTATION BITTERS

do not fail, they produce a beneficial effect immediately; they are pleasant to the palate and are particularly adapted to ladies, and all delicate persons requiring a healthy, pure and gentle stimulant.

They purify, strengthen and invigorate.
They create a healthy appetite.
They are an antidote to change of water and diet.
They overcome effects of dissipation and late hours.
They strengthen the system and cultivate the mind.
They prevent malaria and intermittent fevers.
They purify the breath and action of the stomach.
They cure Dyspepsia and Constipation.
They cure Diarrhea, Cholera and Cholera Morbus.
They cure Liver Complaint and Nervous Headache.
They make the weak strong, the languid brilliant, and are exhausted nature's great restorer. They are composed of the celebrated Calisaya bark, wintergreen, anise-root, roots and herbs, all preserved in perfectly pure St. Croix Rum. For particulars, see circulars and testimonials around each bottle.

Beware of imposition. Any person pretending to sell Plantation Bitters by the gallon or in bulk, or in any manner except in our patent bottle, the cork of which is covered by our private United States stamp, and having our fac-simile signature on a steel plate label, is a swindler and impostor. To fill our bottle with any material—whether sold as Plantation Bitters or by any other name—is a crime, and will be so dealt with. We already have our eye upon two parties who have thus tried to impose upon the public, but will only succeed in ruining themselves. Be on your guard.

The demand for these Bitters from ladies, clergymen, merchants, &c., is immense, and is the evidence of their great superiority.

They are sold by all respectable druggists, grocers, physicians, hotels, saloons, steamboats and country stores.

The Grand Jury for the United States Court for the Northern District of Ohio, submitted a report to the Court a few days ago, in which therein the following appears:

SECRET SOCIETIES.

The existence of secret societies for the purpose of opposing or embarrassing the efforts of the Government in its arduous struggle, is a fact too well established and doubted by a great portion of this community. On this point the Grand Jury can furnish reliable information as to the existence of one such in this Judicial District. It is a source of mortification to us to report such a fact, but that it is so we entertain no doubt. That disloyal men meet in secret, at least themselves together in secret conclave for such purposes is a company, constituted by the belief, has in almost incredible, and particularly considering the condition, certainly, of our country, not more than two years had been in. But if consummate depravity and the lowest treason has combined with intelligence, and be governed by it, it will assume no central wonder.

We affirm, then, if faith can be placed in human testimony, that such an association does exist, or did exist not many months ago within the jurisdiction of this Court, the members of which were sworn on the Holy Evangelists, to support the Constitution of the United States, and to protect, from all death, each might be made by the Government for soldiers—to shield Government from our organized foes abroad, and for worthless traitors within its territory—at the whole country—the element for concealing for mutual protection or to prevent the arrest of deserters was to be the firing of a rifle four times in as many minutes—certain signals were agreed upon by which members of this and other like societies, should be mutually known to each other. Advice was given by the leading conspirators, to such as had no arms to procure them, by purchasing, if necessary, and a channel was designated through which they might be bought.

Revolvers, swords and knives were exhibited at the time as evidence as to quality—a military organization, to be engaged—Government cannot were to be taken by force. Among these desperadoes was one deserter, and one drafted man who had evaded muster or service, and he took occasion the character of the deserter, to be free of any kind, rebellious, if any, to the Government, and to be killed and avenged, if he could come to be buried respectively.

Of the number of such associations, or of their ramifications, or of their operations or the extent of their designs, we have no information, and probably none but their chiefs have. The case we present is an isolated one, but is probably a specimen of hundreds if not of thousands through the land on which a fearful superstructure has been reared that, if undisturbed, may involve our institutions and our people in one common ruin. From very recent occurrences in our own State, Ohio, we are warranted in believing that bold of operations A wide one, particularly that, coherent measures and embracing in their ramifications, as many disloyal and treasonable traitors to our cause as any part of the earth by their vile approach.

THE SIEGE OF CHARLESTON.

OFFICIAL REPORT OF GEN. GILLMORE.

His Losses in the Operations Thus Far, 535 Killed and Wounded, and About 350 Missing.

The Health of the Command Improving.

WASHINGTON, Friday, July 25.

The following is-day was received at the headquarters of the army:

DEPARTMENT OF THE SOUTH, HEADQUARTERS FIELD, HILTON HEAD, S. C., July 23, 1862.

Major-Gen. H. W. Halleck, General-in-Chief, U. S. A., Washington, D. C.:

Sir: My Medical Director in the field reports an aggregate loss in killed and wounded in our hands of 535. I judge there are 350 missing. The losses cover the three actions of the 10th, 11th and 16th instants. Many of the wounded will return to duty in a week or ten days. The health of the command is improving.

Respectfully your obedient servant,

Q. A. GILLMORE, Brig.-Gen. Comdg.

THE BRITISH WEST INDIES.

Movements of the Pirate Florida—How She Procures Her Coal.

The following is an extract from a letter to HAYDEN WALLER, Esq., Secretary of the Board of Underwriters:

BERMUDA, Wednesday, July 22.

"The privateer Florida is still in port, her departure having been delayed by the refusal of the naval authorities to furnish her with fuel; but she is now getting a supply from the Confederate steamer Herald, and will sail in a day or two on her voyage of destruction. Any American in these waters would have made an easy capture of her, as her speed has been very defective. The coal she is now getting is of an inferior quality, and must also affect her speed."

The Rebel Steamer Beauregard Makes an Unsuccessful Attempt to Run by Charleston.

The British steamer Corsica, LEMESSURIER, from Nassau, N. P., July 17, with mails, passengers, &c., to E. CUNARD, arrived yesterday morning.

The Confederate steamer Beauregard, after attempting to run the blockade at Charleston, returned to Nassau about July 25, and passed close to an American cruiser off Nassau while entering the harbor.

Earlier Nassau advices report that several blockade runners had returned, unable to enter the rebel ports.

The United States gunboat Tioga had called at Nassau and left for Key West.

Wilmington, N. C., dates to the 19th inst. had been received at the Bermuda Evening Post Office.

The Governor of Nassau had received an intimation from Lord Lyons that his Lordship's efforts in behalf of the Washington Cabinet to withdraw its prohibition of the exportation of live stock to Nassau have been wholly fruitless.

THE BLOCKADE RUNNERS.

THE CAPTURE OF THE BRITANNIA.

From the Nassau Guardian, July 5.

The steamer Britannia, Capt. DE FORREST, bound from Charleston to this port, was chased on the 20th ult. by the Federal gunboat St. Jago de Cuba, and captured about 150 miles from Abaco. The chase continued fourteen hours, and, had the gunboat not been between her and the land, she would have escaped. The Captain and passengers of the Britannia were transferred to the gunboat, and a prize crew took possession of the vessel. She was then taken in tow by the gunboat, for the purpose of being conveyed to Port Royal, and two days afterward they fell in with the bark Tycoon, bound for New-Orleans. Six of the passengers went on board the bark; (here not being accommodation for more,) when our vessel landed at Great Stirrup's Cay, and arrived here yesterday in a sloop.

A CURIOUS COMPLIMENT.

The following curious card, addressed to the Captain of a notorious blockade runner, is published in the Nassau Advertiser:

Capt. Ryan, Commanding Steamship Alice:

DEAR SIR: The undersigned passengers on your ship from Charleston to this port, beg leave to express to you their admiration of your skill as commander, and your deportment as a gentleman to those who have been good fortune to travel with you.

(At all times the navigation of the sea is one of peril; if so in time of peace, how much more so is it when you not only have to encounter its usual dangers, but also are in constant dread of an enemy, perhaps even more dangerous. A good navigator such as you have proved yourself, can escape the perils of the ocean by your skill in the profession, but that knowledge will prove of but little avail when the bullets and shot of the enemy are whizzing around the vessel, the management of which is to bring you safe to port—therefore it is with sincere pleasure that we congratulate you on the safety of your ship, self, and the undersigned, on this your first trip in command of so fine a steamer.

THE PASSENGERS OF THE ALICE.

THE ARABIAN.

From the Nassau Advertiser, July 25.

The steamer Arabian, from Wilmington, N. C., arrived here yesterday. The Arabian had been detained by the Confederate authorities at Wilmington on suspicion of her being owned in New-York, but proof of British ownership having been established, she was allowed to proceed.

MISCELLANEOUS ARRIVALS AND DEPARTURES.

In the ship news column of the Guardian, we find the following notices of the movements of blockade runners:

ARRIVED.

The steamer E. B. Sprague, Capt. Hewes, arrived this morning from Beaufort, N. C., and reports that the steamer George Peabody, loaded with ammunition, from Fortress Monroe, got aground on Cape Lookout Shoals, causing her to spring a leak. After transferring part of her cargo to another steamer, she succeeded in getting off, and ran into Beaufort.

Col. C. W. THOMAS, Quartermaster at Fortress Monroe, arrived to-day from Newbern.

THE VIEWS OF GEN. LOGAN.

His Reception at DuQuoin, Ills., Yesterday—He Makes a War Speech at Carbondale.

DUQUOIN, Ill., Friday, July 21.

Maj.-Gen. LOGAN arrived here this morning, and was met at the depot by a large concourse of citizens as a committee, who bade him welcome "as the honored son of Illinois, and the admired of all loyal men."

In a speech at Carbondale yesterday, Gen. LOGAN said he had no disposition to discuss politics. He was not a politician, and thanked God for it. He only wanted to consider what was good for the country. When the war is over we can ask "Who is the villain that has caused it?" Now the house is on fire, and we must put it out. We should not ask who began the war at this time. The President was forced at every step to take measures to carry the war on, yet some cried that it was unconstitutional. We fought the Mexicans because they made war on the Government, and if that war was constitutional, why was not this? He ridiculed the sentimentalism of those who objected to the war because the war was against our brethren. He was no Abolitionist for the President, but would stand by him in all his efforts to put down the rebellion, even if he sent elephants South to trample the people down there. All the extremities of a war like this could not be foreseen and provided for by the Constitution. The President was empowered to raise armies, and that was sufficient. If this was unconstitutional, JEFF. DAVIS must be right. He defended and explained the Conscription act, and denounced the New-York riot. If the leaders were hung in the first tree we would have no more mobs. He had seen men smile when we were whipped, and frown like angry clouds when we were victorious; but we expected they would all do themselves the justice not to be traitors on account of the infamy they would bring on their families. We must be for our country right or wrong. A man who was not for this Government would hate Heaven if he lived to it. He showed how ridiculous was the peace cry; and said the only way to peace was to soundly thrash the rebels, and they would come back as humble as need be; and this whipping they would get as sure as there was a God in Heaven. He spoke of the condition of the Government at the time of the breaking out of the rebellion—the army nearly all shipped South. With these disadvantages, what success had been achieved? With regard to the Proclamation, if the rebels wanted their negroes let them stop fighting. If the Proclamation was wrong, let them lay down their arms and appeal to the Courts.

Gen. Logan at Du Quoin, Ill.

DU QUOIN, Friday, July 21.

Gen. LOGAN addressed about 6,000 persons here to-day. He was enthusiastically received and applauded throughout. He talked like a man in earnest who cares nothing for party, but who is intensely interested in the welfare of his country. The drift of his speech was similar to that delivered at Carbondale yesterday. He argued it to be the duty of every one to stand by the Government. He most unmercifully condemn all sympathizers with the rebellion, and those who find so much fault with the President, army, the war, and everything else except JEFF. DAVIS & Co. He argued the constitutionality of the war and its measures, and showed the hypocrisy of those who see so much that is unconstitutional in the acts of the Administration, but say nothing against the unconstitutionality of secession and acts of rebellion. He ran the peace men into all sorts of sharp corners, exposed the fallacy of their arguments, showed they don't themselves know what they want. He took up the Springfield peace resolutions, and showed that if they were correct, all our glorious victories of July had been tending to subvert the Constitution and the Government. If men are loyal they will favor the prosecution of the war; if not they will find all manner of excuses. If men oppose the war, it must be because they fear their friends will get their deserts. Some objected because the soldiers committed depredations. When we started for Jackson and Vicksburgh with five rations, fought five battles, were refused to one meal or apiece, the men hungry and footsore, he told them to help themselves; and whenever his troops got into such a position they should have what they could get. The rebels do the same. They steal everything, even negroes, to keep us from getting any. But you never hear of that being wrong. He insisted that all should be for their country right or wrong, and the people should give the soldiers their sympathy and support.

It is impossible to give Gen. LOGAN justice in a telegraphic report. At the close of his speech, the following resolutions were presented by Gen. HAYNIE, which were adopted unanimously:

Resolved, That we will stand by the constituted authorities of the country in their efforts to maintain, preserve and perpetuate the Union and Constitution, at whatever cost and against whatever power, foreign or domestic, that may assail it; and that, although we deplore the calamities of civil war, yet all the States must be restored to the Union, and the laws must be executed alike all over the country, and peace must be secured by victory until the last rebel lays down his arms.

Resolved, That we tender to all our brave and gallant soldiers, from highest to lowest, our warmest sympathies, and acknowledge our gratitude to them for their heroism, their sacrifices, and the unmurmuring unshrinking renown shed upon our armies by their glorious deeds.

Another Speech, Strong and Emphatic, by Gen. Logan.

On his expected arrival at Cairo, the other day, from Vicksburgh, Maj.-Gen. LOGAN addressed a circle of welcoming friends in substance as follows:

"It makes no difference whether you call me Democrat, Republican or Abolitionist—as some have of late named me. It does not change my feelings—does not alter my action. I am for my country every time—for my country first, last and always—and am fighting for the right of that country to be numbered among the honored nations of the earth. Until this is brought about, and this rebellion crushed out, I am but an American citizen. When that right shall have been asserted, then, should we find that there is something wrong in the fable that our fathers reared, something we desire to change, it will be time enough to come up and demand the change. Now we have this accursed rebellion to root out. It must be rooted out. I am for using every means, and all means for putting it to an end. If the people of the North would use the same force JEFF. DAVIS and his minions use—and were as unanimous as they are—for in the South force of arms compels every man to act as though he sanctioned the rebellion whether he feels inclined or not—this war would be successfully terminated in less than six months.

"Every mother's son who is opposed to the war should be compelled either to take up arms against or for us. Then there would be no talk of peace here in the North, no talk of resistance, no such men as VALLANDIGHAM, no such cowards as those who support all such men and say these things.

VALLANDIGHAM says he has traveled over the Confederacy—using the term 'Confederacy'—not the phrase so-called Confederacy, (for I do not acknowledge the existence of any authority or Government in America aside from that of the United States)—and has not met man, woman or child who does not sustain the war, and who is not determined to fight it out to the death or the bitter end. VALLANDIGHAM there simply lies. He tells what is not true, and he knows it. VALLANDIGHAM, aside from the leading men—JEFF. DAVIS, Toombs and STEPHENS—did not, I venture to say, speak with a dozen persons while taking his lovely unitary trip through Dixie. Had he done so, his report would have been of a different color. The people who are fighting against this Government—the minor whites comprising the rank and file of the rebellion—misconceive of them do not know what they are fighting for, do not know what they are fighting against. A majority of them do not know anything, and hundreds of them never saw the inside of a school in their lives until they entered the army. Thoroughly in triumph. They cry out from the Fourth of July, or anything else that is good, but poor and ignorant as they are, let them compare their lot, their condition and their comfort in a man, country or a country where they have had a chance to do anything rather than fight one day longer as they have been fighting. It is only by the force of bayonets that their army is kept together. Even that cannot prevent their deserters from flocking into Jackson by hundreds, to take the oath of allegiance or to join the Union ranks. And I tell you what I know when I say that it will not be many days ere the entire States of Mississippi and Tennessee will be knocking loudly for admission to a Union which not long since they thought their puny efforts could quickly dissolve. They are talking of it even now.

"Speaking of being united, I tell you, by the Eternal God, there was never a more truthful sentiment than that of Dickinson: 'Those who are not with us are against us,' and I reiterate it, and add, that those who are not with us should hesitate, or should be with their Southern brethren, fighting with them.

"Let them either aid the Government, or go where they can bolster up the tottering fortunes of rebeldom. Better have a dozen foes in the field than one skulking in the rear behind our backs.

"To all copperheads, peace men, agitators, anti-war men—be they Republicans or Democrats—for we have them here pretending to be both—I have a word to say on behalf of our brave soldiers. You have undoubtedly heard said that the way has its opposers in the ranks of the Union army. If is an accursed and foul aspersion upon the fair fame of men who are willing to spill their blood and give their lives for the country. They are for the Union. They fight for the people and their country—for the suppression of the rebellion. Let me say to all opposers of the war: The time will come when men composing this great army will come to their homes. They have had their eyes upon these unmitigated cowards, these opponents of the country and the Administration—and the Administration, I contend, is the country—and when they return, it will do the soul of every truly loyal man good to see the unanimity manifest in which they will cause these cranks and peace agitators to seek shelter in hell.

"You will excuse me, gentlemen, if, in saying what I have said, I have been rather profuse and heavy in the way of emphasis. Two years away from civilization, with my men, has made me rather emphatic in all my thoughts and words in regard to certain things. I speak emphatically because I emphatically feel that which my tongue finds to say."

REBEL VIEWS OF THE SITUATION.

From the Wilmington (N. C.) Journal, July 18.

Looking at the present position of things in all its aspects our eye naturally fixes upon a few points which seems to us the most important.

First then, Lee had to fall back behind the Potomac, and may have to fall back to the line of the Rappahannock, in order that other more and more vital points may be captured. The enemy's ferocious onset on so many points was no doubt intended to compel this action on the part of Lee. It was neither weakness, defeat, disaster nor demoralization on the part of Lee's army that led to its withdrawal from the enemy's country.

Second—The army of JOHNSTON has been forced to fall back from Jackson, to keep from being flanked on the right. GRANT cannot follow him at once. The country between the Pearl and Big Black rivers is thinly settled, and after one army has traversed it in retreat, another army advancing in pursuit will find neither food for man nor forage for beast. GRANT has depended upon gunboats on the Yazoo for his supplies since the investment of Vicksburgh, and his wagon train has yet to be obtained and organized. Until that is done he can hardly penetrate further into the bowels of the land. This will arrest the progress of any operations of magnitude in that section for some time. His attack upon Mobile cannot then be can afford. The same will apply to ROSECRANS in Southeastern Tennessee.

Third—For the present, we suppose BUELL's advance against East Tennessee is postponed, part of his force having gone to Memphis and part to GRANT. The movement may, and no doubt will be resumed at no distant day.

Fourth—The Trans-Mississippi District is now self-containing in the way of ammunition and military stores. Cotton finds its way to Matamoras consigned to an English house, and army supplies find their way through the same channel. We don't see that the fall of Vicksburgh and Port Hudson can effect Western Louisiana, Arkansas or Texas. They have always given more than they have received, except in the way of negroes and cotton. Negroes we think that they have had some of them that could very well have been spared.

Fifth—Charleston is attacked, and Richmond is or has been threatened by a coup de main. Charleston is in no immediate danger. The present siege is carried on by approaches which are slow but drowsfully sure, unless the enemy's work can be stormed and he taken. Charleston gallery on a siege of four to five months is guess what will be the result of attack, as now is the time the most chief centre of blockade running on the southern coast should remain unmolested. The difficulty about the fortification of Morris' Island we have explained in another article.

Sixth—The Raiders, who can effect little in a military point of view, but who are intended, not only to gratify the malice of the Lincolnites, but to weaken the resources of the South and incline her people to seek for peace, even upon terms of submission—yes, upon any terms, as, indeed, one or two papers in this State already prologuize, there somehow being always a remarkable likeness between their tone and the movements of the Federals, as though they were, as the animal magnetisers used to say, en rapport.

Thus, then, we have Lee falling back for the protection of his communications, and to permit the forces of the Confederacy to be directed upon other points, and for defensive objects. We find GRANT, ROSECRANS and BUELL virtually arrested for the time being, the trans-Mississippi district acting essentially on a new base—the Rio Grande—for military supplies, its food and transportation being found in abundance at home. And, which we have not yet mentioned, Meagher cutting a wide row in the loyal States, giving them a taste of war sufficient to disincline them from going away under LINCOLN's call to continue a war of which they are already sick. Charleston is vigorously defended, and will be still more so under the new defensive attitude just assumed, while we trust that the marauding parties of the enemy will be vigorously arrested at their start, before they have escaped into the heart of the country, where they may elude pursuit.

A REBEL PRISONER ON THE WAR.

HE RESOLVES TO TAKE THE OATH OF ALLEGIANCE.

The following extract from a letter from a rebel prisoner to a friend in New-York State, is significant:

"I was one of the many who, at the breaking out of the rebellion, was misled by horrid tales and solemn promises, to be fulfilled at the close of the war, to go into the army.

I had a start in the world in Athens, Clark County, Ga., at the beginning of the war, and everything looked very encouraging; as all thought that the war would not last six months, and I could retire with all the honors of a true Southern man, and be regularly installed and set up in business, soon to make a fortune and to enjoy the rest of my life. In this I have been sadly mistaken.

Instead of the war lasting six months or twelve months, I have served twenty-eight months, and there is no prospect of its coming to a close for twelve months to come, and what I left at home I have spent while in service, and am now a prisoner of war, with nothing but the prospect of being turned out upon the world without a cent to help myself with.

He who will be deluded to take up arms against his country must suffer the consequences. As for me, I have got enough of the war, and am about to take the oath and remain in the Union, and let rebeldom go to the d—l. They have beat me out of my two years' work and $2,000. I think I will quit, and keep quiet for a few days."

Brevet Brig.-Gen. Harvey Brown's Position and Powers.

One of the City journals, who cannot appreciate the value of Gen. BROWN's efforts to suppress the riotous demonstration in this City, has gone so far as to assert that he did not have the position and powers of Military Commandant. The following extract from one of the orders of the War Department settles that question.

WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE, WASHINGTON, April 7, 1862.

GENERAL ORDERS No. 38.—(Extract.)

* * * * * * *

5. The Military Commander's duties in reference to all troops and enlisted men who happen to come within the limits of his command, will be precisely those of a commanding officer of a military force.

12. The duties of Military Commander, as above defined, will devolve, in the City of New-York and the military posts in that vicinity, on Brevet Brig.-Gen. H. Brown, Colonel Fifth regiment United States artillery.

By order of the Secretary of War.

L. THOMAS, Adjutant-General.

HILTON'S INSOLUBLE CEMENT IS A NEW THING.—Nothing like it has ever been before offered to the public. It is not a combination of rubber, gutta percha, or glue. It mends patches and linings to boots and shoes sufficiently strong without stitching. It mends broken furniture, crockery, ware, bone, ivory, and all articles of household use. It is a liquid, and as easily applied as common paste. It is insoluble in water or oil. It adheres city substances firmly and completely. Put up in packages for family and manufacturers' use, from two ounces to a hundred pounds. For sale at all stores. HILTON BROS. & CO., Proprietors, Providence. Office, corner of Dyer and Pine streets.
